PREFACE

The primary purpose of this publication was to edit, with translation and necessary notes, the incantation texts inscribed on bowls from Nippur, now in the possession of the Museum. But it soon became apparent that full account should be made of all other published texts of like character, both for my own advantage in securing a larger material for collation and also for the convenience of scholars by presenting in one work a survey of a rather remote and scattered field, in which many have labored but none has attempted a treatment of the subject at large. I have accordingly not only given a description of all the earlier material but also collated it as fully as possible both in the Glossaries and in the references of Introduction and Commentary. The Introduction, thus extended beyond the field of the Nippur texts, has grown to still greater dimensions with the enlarging perception of the intimate relations between the bowl-inscriptions and the broad fields of ancient magical literature. Previous editors, working before the present great development of the study of magic, had taken little notice of these connections with a wider world. Analogies with the Talmud and possible connections with the Kabbalistic lore had been pointed out, but the bowls still remained without definite place or links in the general field of ancient magic. Withal the relations of Jewish magic to the larger whole have not yet been ascertained.

But within the last few decades an immense advance has been made in our knowledge of ancient magic and of its prime importance as a study in the history of mankind. The chief stimulus to this has come, first, from the anthropologists and the students of comparative religion, who have taught us not to ignore the most primitive or most degraded manifestations of the human spirit. Then there have been the rapid strides in the advance of Egyptology and Assyriology, where at every step the student faces the problem of the identities and differences of magic and religion. Further, the classical philologists have at last condescended to examine the vulgar magical records in the Greek and Latin tongues, and have found an interest in them as revealing how the ancient "man of the street," and wiser men as well, actually talked and thought, in modes different from the traditional standards of the classical civilization. Of this large increase in material and understanding I have been fortunately able to avail myself, with the result of the discovery of innumerable clues proving that the bowl-magic is in part the lineal descendant of the old Babylonian sorcery while at the same time—and this is the more important because a less expected discovery—it takes its place in that great field of Hellenistic magic which pervaded the whole of the western world at the beginning of the Christian era. My chief contribution to the study has been in these two directions, the relations with the cuneiform religious texts and the Greek magical papyri. The writer's knowledge of Egyptian magic was wholly at second hand, and in any case that earlier influence was mediated to this special field through Hellenism. The Christian Syrian literature is shown to have its close connections, being thoroughly infused, as was the early Church, with magical ideas. Magic within Judaism has been the subject of capital monographs by competent Jewish scholars, and in that direction I have not been able to do much more than to appropriate their results, except so far as to show the absolute community of ideas and terms and practice between Jewish and Gentile sorcery. It remains a subject for an interesting investigation to discover just what Judaism gave to, and what it received from, the Hellenistic magic, but probably a hopeless study, for, as someone has remarked, in the history of magic we must pursue not the genealogical but the analogical method. As a result of these comparisons, the conclusion must be drawn, as indicated in § 15 of the Introduction, that the magic of the bowls, and in a general way, all Jewish magic, has come out of the crucible of the Graeco-Roman world, which, on account of its dominating civilization, we call Hellenistic; it is not Jewish but eclectic.

However, with this broadening of the scope of the work, it has been the fixed purpose not to attempt any general study of magic; this would have been but to confuse my work and cloud my results. With a single eye, the facts of the texts have been illustrated in as objective a way as possible from the phenomena of locally inherited and contemporaneous magic, with the intent of establishing the immediate bonds of connection. My work would be a contribution from a very small and limited field to the study of magical thought and practice within a definite age and region. At least there has come to the writer the satisfaction of finding a place for the membra disjecta of these out-of-the-way texts in the huge colossus of that system of magic which was once almost the actual religion of our western civilization.

If I appear to have gone into much detail in the treatment of these non-literary texts, I trust that the results will justify my undertaking; the expansion of the work has proceeded naturally and subtly much beyond the editor's desire and convenience. From the philological point of view these vulgar inscriptions are of as much interest to the Semitist as are the magical papyri to the classicist. Careful study shows that, with the exception of intentionally unintelligible passages, mystic phrases and the like, the words and the syntax of the texts are the autograph representatives of the language of their writers. Three different Aramaic dialects, each with its own script, and one script a peculiar variety of the Edessene, are offered in the bowls from Nippur, and they are of importance as original documents of the dialectic forms of the speech of Babylonia about the eve of the rise of Islam. Other original monuments are well-nigh lacking for this field; we are confined almost entirely to the school-literatures of religious sects, of the Jews, Christian Syrians and Mandaeans, whose books are preserved mostly in late manuscripts. The Jewish magical literature is all documentarily late or uncertain as to age, and our texts have a historical worth as almost the earliest records in that line which can be exactly dated. Further, the obscure and crabbed condition of the texts compelled an exact philological examination in order to test hypotheses of interpretation. And as to matters beyond philology, it will not, I hope, be set down to wilful acrobacy if I have attempted to work out very small clues. In such work as this there is no immediate compensation on the surface, and it is only by following out the fine tendrils of connection that results worth while can be obtained. The writer's experience in his study is well expressed by some words of Professor Deissmann: "It may be that hundreds of stones, tiresomely repeating the same monotonous formula, have only the value of a single authority, yet in their totality, these epigraphic results furnish us with plenty of material—only one should not expect too much of them, or too little" (Bible Studies, 82).

In regard to the representation of the texts it might have been technically more correct to present them in their several scripts. But apart from the difficulty of procuring two of these types in American printing houses and compositors who could set them, it must be patent that the general convenience is far better subserved by presenting the texts in the well-known Hebrew character, while those who desire the original scripts can satisfy themselves with the facsimiles published in the second volume. The peculiar Mandaic relative particle is represented, according to convention, by the diacritical ܐ; but I have departed from the usual custom of editing Mandaic texts by representing the pronominal suffix in -h by ܐ and have used ܐ for the radical ܐ or ܐ, which two sounds fall together in the dialect. In the Glossaries words containing this common character are arranged according to its etymological distinction as ܐ or ܐ. In the transliterations inferior points indicate doubtful readings, superior points are used for the diacritical marks of the Syriac texts. The numbered lines of the texts represent the spiral lines, taken as beginning from the radius where the inscription begins.

The Prefatory Note to the Plates describes how the facsimiles were made. I have to express my deep obligation to my friend and colleague, the Rev. Dr. R. K. Yerkes, for his careful reading of the volume in proof.

JAMES A. MONTGOMERY.

I. SURVEY OF THE MATERIAL

§ 1. THE MATERIAL IN THE MUSEUM

THE University Museum contains a large number of inscribed earthenware bowls found at Nippur belonging to the category of the so-called "Incantation Bowls." These vessels are generally of the size and shape of a modern porridge-bowl, except that in most cases the bowl is somewhat cone-shaped, so that when set down it balances itself in a state of unstable equilibrium. Some few have the boss expanded into a rim, thus giving a flat surface at the bottom of the bowl. The most common size is of about 16 cm. diameter at top, by 5 cm. full depth. There is one large bowl, 28 x 16 cm.¹

The bowls are made of a good clay, and are wheel-turned and kiln-dried; they have no surface, slip or glazing of any kind.² They were a domestic ware, intended for foods, and in no way differ from the simple vessels which to this day are made in the Orient for household use.

The bowls in the Museum were excavated at Nippur, in Babylonia, by the University of Pennsylvania Expedition; so far as I know, they are finds of the first two campaigns, conducted by Professor Peters in the years 1888, 1889. According to Peters' account,³ these bowls were found on the top, or in the first strata of the mounds, in several places. They appear generally to have been discovered in the ruins of houses, amidst what Peters suggests were Jewish settlements; the whole surface of one hill, he says "was covered with a Jewish settlement, the houses of which were built of mud-brick, and in almost every house we found one, or more,

³ See his Nippur, the Index to which, sub "Jewish incantation bowls" gives the references.

Jewish incantation bowls."⁴ At least in one case bowls were found in connection with a cemetery; "we found ourselves in a graveyard. . . . It was interesting to find, between one and two metres below the surface, in the immediate neighborhood of slipper-shaped coffins, inscribed Hebrew bowls."⁵ As for the chronological light thrown upon these bowls, Cufic coins were found in the houses of these "Jewish" settlements,⁶ and one of the most extensive finds of inscribed bowls was in the strata above the "Court of Columns," a Parthian building.⁷ Peters holds the seventh century to be the latest date for the Jewish settlements where Cufic coins were found.⁸

The Museum Catalogue counts over 150 numbers of this class of specimens, but the enumeration includes a large number of fragments. About 30 of the bowls are what I would call "original fakes"; they are inscribed with letters arbitrarily arranged, or with pot-hooks, or even in some cases with mere scrawls, and I judge that these articles were palmed off on the unlearned public as "quite as good" as true incantations.⁹ A still larger number of the bowls are so broken and their inscriptions so defaced, that I have not been able to use them. Others again were inscribed by so illiterate scribes that so far as they can be made out, they offer only some magical jargon, which adds nothing to our knowledge. Again there are a few texts which are fairly written and without those self-betraying combinations of letters that suggest a mock inscription, but which nevertheless are not Semitic. They may be in some non-Semitic tongue, whether, for example, in Pahlavi, I am not able to say. One of the neatest of the bowls, No. 2954, containing only four circular lines of inscription, interested me as presenting a novel alphabet; but I soon came to the conclusion that this is but another "fake," produced we may suppose by some learned impostor—or wag.

⁷ Hilprecht, Explorations in Bible Lands, p. 447.

⁸ ii, 153, 183, 186. For further discussion of the date, see § 14.

All the relics from Nippur came to the University as the gift of the Sultan of Turkey, and in the matter of these incantation bowls I understand that the best specimens, the largest and fairest, have been retained in the Imperial Museum at Constantinople. At all events those in Philadelphia in almost all cases prevent complete decipherment because of mutilation.¹⁹ A large segment of the spherical surface may be missing, or an extensive portion of the interior, a side, or the upper or lower portion of the bowl may have become illegible, probably through the action of water. The inscription being spiral, such mutilations intrude their annoyance into every line. The damaged nature of this collection has added much to the toil of decipherment, for every break in the text and every effacement necessitates speculation as to the missing contents. On the other hand it is cause for remark and gratitude that these fragile vessels have been preserved as intact as they are, and that the scribes used such excellent ink that what they wrote has largely survived in defiance of "the powers of the air," the elements and the corroding chemical agents.

As a result of the investigation of the whole collection I have selected 40 bowls for publication, to which number should be added the one published earlier by Myhrman (accompanying No. 7). The remaining bowls and fragments are on the whole too illegible or too undecipherable to make it worth while to add them to this material. The languages of the inscriptions are three Aramaic dialects:— (1) the language with which we are familiar from the Babylonian Talmud, to which belong Nos. 1-30; (2) a Syriac dialect, Nos. 31-37; the Mandaic, Nos. 38-40. Each of these has its own script. As an appendix, I publish, as No. 41, a human skull inscribed with a magical inscription of like character to those on the bowls, and No. 42 is a text of peculiar magical contents which has come to my hands, but with its original now lacking in the Museum.

§ 2. THE MATERIAL HITHERTO PUBLISHED, AND IN OTHER COLLECTIONS¹

The first publication of Mesopotamian incantation bowls appeared in Layard's notable volume, Discoveries in the Ruins of Nineveh and Babylon.² In describing his finds at Tell Amran, near Hillah, the great explorer tells of discovering "five cups or bowls of earthenware, and fragments of others, covered on the inner surface with letters written in a kind of ink" (p. 509). He notes that like material had been discovered before. 'Two from the collection of a Mr. Stewart had been deposited in the British Museum, which had also acquired through Colonel Rawlinson eight specimens obtained at Bagdad, their provenance however being unknown. In a later passage (p. 524) Layard records the discovery of a similar bowl, along with many fragments, at Nippur,—the precursor of the collection in Philadelphia.

Layard committed his bowls to Mr. Thomas Ellis, of the staff of the British Museum, whose results are given in Layard's work, appearing pp. 509-523.³ Layard himself takes up the discussion p. 523 ff, with criticism of Ellis's results. The latter presented five Judaeo-Aramaic bowls, and one in Syriac, with summaries of fragments of others. Of these only four were given in facsimile, nos. 1, 3, 5, 6.⁴ Subsequent scholarly investigation has proved not only that Ellis was wild in his interpretations of the bowls, but also that the facsimiles were unreliable. Hence the latter can only be used with caution or with the aid of later

² London, 1853. There is a German translation by Zenker, the bowls appearing there in Plate xx.

³ Layard leaves it somewhat indefinite which bowls were treated by Ellis.

copies, while the bowls published without facsimiles are absolutely worthless as scientific copy. Layard's publication therefore did little more than attract the attention of scholars to a fresh field of philology and religious lore.

The first scientific treatment of this new material came from M. A. Levy, of Breslau, who devoted a long essay to Ellis's bowl, no. 1, in the Zeitschrift d. Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft for 1855 (ix, 465).⁵ He was the first to grasp the peculiar lingo of the inscription, and in his commentary drew largely from Judaistic and Mandaic stores of learning. He also gave an elaborate treatment of the palaeography of the bowl, overthrowing the claims that had been advanced for a pre-Christian origin.

Twenty years later J. M. Rodwell published a bowl from Hillah that had been procured by the British Museum, under the title, Remarks upon a Terra-Cotta Vase, with a photographic facsimile.⁶ This second English venture at decipherment was no better than the first, its sole merit lying in the fact that the French scholar J. Halévy was induced to take up the same bowl on the basis of the facsimile, and to give it a scholarly transliteration and translation, with commentary, under the title, Observation sur un vase judéo-babylonien du British Muséum.⁷ Four of the bowls that had been published were presented by the great Hebrew epigraphist Chwolson in his monumental Corpus inscriptionum hebraicarum.⁸ The first (Chwolson's number, 18) is Ellis no. 1, the second (no. 19) is Ellis no. 3, the third (no. 20) is the bowl published by Rodwell and Halévy; and the

⁶ In TSBA, ii (1873), 114.

⁷ In Comptes rendus de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres, series iv, vol. v (for 1877; Paris, 1878), 288. He re-edited his material in his Mélanges de critique et d'histoire, 229.

fourth (no. 21) is Ellis no. 5. Chwolson adopted a skeptical position toward the speculations and guesses of his predecessors, and his commentaries are valuable as a restraint upon their theories. Of special interest is his discussion of the age of the bowls from the palaeographic point of view—a subject which I take up in § 5.

The most extensive editor of the material under discussion has been Moise Schwab, the author of the French translation of the Talmud. In 1882 he published, in collaboration with E. Babelon, a bowl in the possession of the French government, under the title Un vase judéo-chaldéen de la Bibliothèque Nationale,⁹ along with a facsimile and commentary. In 1885 he published a bowl at the Louvre in an article entitled Une coupe d'incantation,¹⁰ without facsimile. He then presented a large series of bowls in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, for the years 1891 and 1892.¹¹ He included several bowls already published, with the old facsimiles, but failed to offer photographic copies of the bowls he brought to light. It seems strange that the English scholarly world rested content with the poor facsimiles of the relics in the British Museum, made almost forty years before, and that Schwab did not avail himself of better texts than his predecessors had used. Between the articles appearing in the two volumes of the PSBA Dr. Schwab contributed studies of two bowls to the Revue d'assyriologie, etc., under the title, "Deux vases judéo-babyloniens."¹² These he numbered F and G so as to align them with those appearing in the other publications. The material thus presented by Schwab is as follows:

A, in PSBA, xii = Ellis, no. 1; Levy; Chwolson, no. 18.

B, in PSBA, xii = Ellis, no. 3; Chwolson, no. 19.

This material was first presented to the French Academy of Inscriptions in the years 1883, 1885, 1891. At the end of the first article is a glossary to the bowls published therein.

Meanwhile there had appeared, in 1885, a study of a bowl in a provincial French museum by H. Hyvernat (now professor in the Catholic University, Washington): Sur un vase judéo-babylonien du musée Lycklama de Cannes (Provence).¹⁵ Unfortunately the accompanying photographic facsimiles are barely legible as published; however there is little doubt as to the text and its meaning. "Schwab also refers" to a bowl published by B. Markaug in the Zapiski of the Imperial Russian Society of Archaeology, iv, 83, which I have not been able to procure.

A few years later the collection of incantation bowls at the Royal Museum in Berlin was made the subject of study by two young scholars, working contemporaneously but independently. J. Wohlstein published, under the title, Ueber einige aramäische Inschriften auf Thongefässen des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, five bowls, with introduction to the general subject and commentary.¹⁶ And R. Stübe published a Berlin bowl in his

¹⁸ ZA, viii (1893), 313, and ix (1894), 11. In vol. viii appears no. 2422; in vol. ix, nos. 2416, 2426, 2414, 2417.

*Jüdisch-babylonische Zaubertexte.*¹⁷ The text he published, the longest yet edited, is the same as the second given by Wohlstein; his treatment is fuller than that of his contemporary, to whom he is able to refer in his printed notes. Stübe gives a description of nineteen bowls in the British Museum. Unfortunately neither publication is enriched with facsimiles. Subsequently S. Fraenkel contributed some notes to Wohlstein's bowls in the same journal, in part on the basis of his own transcription.¹⁸

Pognon, French consul at Bagdad, broke the ground of a fresh dialect of bowl-inscriptions with the study of a Mandaic bowl—Une incantation contre les génies malfaisants en mandaïte, appearing in 1892.¹⁹ The bowl was purchased from Arabs at Bismaya. In 1898 the same scholar published an elaborate work upon bowls found at Khuabir 55 km. NW of Musseyib, on the right bank of the Euphrates; he visited the locality but was unable to reach the site where the bowls were found. His work, entitled Inscriptions mandaïtes des coupes de Khoubir,²⁰ contains some valuable appendices, of wider interest than the title suggests, and is furnished like the earlier monograph with full apparatus. Five more Mandaic bowls were published by Lidzbarski in his Ephemeris, i, 89, "Mandäische Zaubertexte." The fifth of these texts is a duplicate of my No. 11 and is given there in parallelism. Three of the texts are in the Berlin Museum, and two in the Louvre.

Professor Gottheil contributed to Peters' Nippur (ii, 182) a translation of one of the bowls at Pennsylvania (= No. 12 below). Dr. Myhrman, of Uppsala, published from the same collection no. 16081, with commentary; his monograph appeared in Le monde orientale, Uppsala, 1907-8, and with revision as a contribution to the Hilprecht Anniversary Volume²¹ under the title An Aramaic Incantation Text; this text is given below in parallel with No. 7.

Pognon also saw some bowls in the square character, some in Estrangelo, and some which he presumed might be in Pahlavi (p. 1). In my citations to Pognon, I cite his two books as A and B respectively.

It is in place here to notice the location of incantation bowls in the various museums. Despite a query addressed over a year ago I have not received any information from the authorities as to the number and character of the bowl-texts at the Imperial Museum in Constantinople; its collection from what I hear must be large and fine, and has been particularly enriched from Nippur.

Dr. L. W. King has kindly informed me that the British Museum contains 61 bowls of our class, exhibited in the Babylonian Room. Some of the specimens, I also learn, are of very large size. The texts are in the square script, Syriac, Mandaic and Arabic.

Schwab thus sums up, for the year 1906, the bowl-texts in the French museums:²² 2 in the National Library, 7 in the Louvre, 2 in the Museum Lycklama, Cannes; also one in private hands.

Through Professor Ranke's kindness I learn that in the Berlin Museum there are 69 bowls with "Hebrew" (i. e. Aramaic?) inscriptions, 9 with Syriac (presumably inclusive of Mandaic). Stübe gives a description of 19 of these. In the same museum there are two inscribed skulls, similar doubtless to the one published below as No. 41.

At the National Museum in Washington are found five bowls, four in square script, one in Estrangelo; but from photographs kindly lent me by Dr. Casanowicz, two of the former are to be designated as "fakes" in the sense used above. These bowls are said to have been found at Hillah. The German Orient-Gesellschaft has recently announced the discovery of three bowls at Asshur,²³ and Koldewey, Tempel von Babylon u. Borsippa, 58, speaks of numerous Aramaic bowls found at Borsippa.

Of bowls in private hands, I note one unpublished Syriac text in the possession of Professor Hyvernât, of the Catholic University, Washington; and three which Mr. Wm. T. Ellis purchased at Nippur in 1911, one of them containing a Syriac text similar to those published in this volume; this text I have prepared for publication in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, where it will shortly appear. A few citations of this text are given in the glossaries under the abbreviation "Montg."²⁴

The provenance of this material is thus confined to a small region, extending from Nippur and Bismaya on the south to Asshur on the north, and lying on both sides of the Euphrates.

§ 3. SOME NOTES ON THE TEXTS HITHERTO PUBLISHED

I offer in this section some critical notes on the texts described in the last section. The texts would in many cases have been simplified if the editors had recognized that there is no distinction in the script between ה and ה, and most often none between ו and י. The glossary will indicate emendations of simple words, but here I present corrections necessary for the construction.

Ellis 1 has been recovered, as remarked above, through a duplicate in the Pennsylvania collection; see to No. 11. No facsimile is given for Ellis 2.

In Ellis 3 the opening lines should read:¹ דיוחן די פתכרי וי סטני ופתכרי:² לטתא אסרן (2) כולהון מן מהפירו בר הינרו... כל פתכרי דיכרי ואיסרתא (3) נוקבתא ופום כל בני אינשא אסרן כולהון מן מהפרו בר הינרו ניד[ר]י ולטתא ו'. The discovery of the proper names, Mehperôz² son of Hindû (see Glossary B), clears up these lines. איסרתא = איסרתא? but see Glossary C under latter word. After the first word the scribe intended to write דיין; inadvertently he broke into the word with פ', and then leaving the error uncorrected (as is the rule of these scribes) continued with the first word.—Read in l. 4, משבניהון (?) for משרניהון; cf. משבנתא in glossary.—In l. 4 f. there is a parallelism to the opening lines of Schwab G:

בשום הפכה הפיכה מורה (?) שמיא הפיכי
כוני והפכי מולי הפיכה שעניהון דכל בני
אנשא תשריה (?) לוטתא דאבא ו'

Schwab G

הפכה הפכה הפכה שמיא הפיכה ארעה
הפיכה כוכב הפיכה מולי הפיכא לוטתא
הפיכה שענותא הפיכא לוטתא דאבא ו' introduces a magical formula which can accomplish the bouleversement (הפיכה) of all things and hence of evil arts. כוני = כוכב, and must be the Assyrian kêwân (biblical כִּין), used in the general sense of planet. שְׁעִיחַ, שְׁעוּתָא, are used in the sense of derisio, etc. (see Payne-Smith, Thes., col. 4249 f.).—What follows is to be read thus: "The curse of father and mother, of daughter and daughter-in-law and mother-in-law is loosed (שריא), what is far and what is near, what is found in country or city—what is found in the country is loosed, and what curses (?) in the city is loosed, and what falls by the way."

In Ellis 5, l. 2, read בִּיתָא (for בְּמִיָּא) and the following word possibly כִּן דְּשֻׁמְיָא, and translate—"a house, whatever its name (i. e. whoever owns it), let them read and depart from it (לִיקְרוּ וּלְיָפְקוּ יִתִּיָּא), even all who dwell in it—(i. e.) any vows," etc.; that is, the evil spirits are to read the kamea and depart. The jussive with ל is exceptional.

For the bowl edited by Rodwell, Halévy, Chwolson and Schwab, I give the following transliteration: חֲרִשִּׁין בִּישִׁין וְעֹבְדִין תְּקִיפִין וְלוֹטְתָא וְנִירִי וְאֶשְׁלֻמְתָּא: מְלָלְתָא דְּרַחֲמִין וְדִקְרִיבִין דְּלִילִיא וְדִמְאֻמְתָּא דְּגַבְרִי וְדִינִישִׁי דְּעַבְדֵּי לִיה וְדְעַבְדִּין לִיה לְכַרְחָאִי וְלַחְוִיתָיָּא וְלִקְיִנְיָתָא דְּבִלְעִיהֶן בְּדִלְעָלָה מִן יוֹמָה דְּנָן וְעַד עָלַם וְכֹלְהֶן אִילָן וְאִילִין מִשְׁמִתִּין וְנִמְנִידִין גִּיּוּרִין וְחִבְרִין עִקְרִין וּמַפְקִין וּמַכְטִּלִין מִן גּוֹפִיָּהֶן וּמִן כָּל הַרְמֵי קוֹמְחִיהֶן וּמִן מִדְּרַחְתֵּיהֶן דְּחִוִּיתָיָּא וְדִבְרָהֲאִי וְעַמְיָּא (דְּבִרְחָאִי וְעַמְיָּא) בְּדִלְעָלָה עַל אֹרַח חֲזִי' אֹו'. So much is clear.—Then follows an apostrophe to a certain star, which appears also in Schwab E. With this parallel to our aid I read: אֹו כּוּכְבָּא: i. e. "Oh (or, woe), the star on which rides salvation (healing),² the one which teaches arts to witches;" that is, some star potent in medicine and black arts, which may be invoked for good or evil.—Towards the end is to be read: בִּישְׁמִיָּא בַר מִסּוֹסִיָּא שְׁמָא. רְבָא מְפּוֹרֶשׁ. "in the name of Bar Mesôsîa (a master-conjurer evidently), the great Ineffable Name."

⁴ Pael pass. ppl.

⁷ Cf. Mal. 3: 20.

A new collation might contribute much to the understanding of Schwab F. In l. 1, שריר ("strong one") is an epithet of the "evil spirit." Read אשבעית at end of line.—L. 2, read עליכי אנתי אנפרת, "like oil they (the spirits) are dipped into the vessel of his heart," i. e., the man's inwards are suffused with diseases as with oil.—L. 9 again הדמי for הרמי.—L. 10, תחומי for תחומי.—L. 11, עד נמירו זמן וארן דאכא כינא. ("ye angels go forth from him) until the consummation of time and that time is known,"—with reference to the day of judgment.

In Schwab G, l. 9, עלמא קלה שמעית ונ' = "wherefore have I heard a voice? I have heard the voice of a man, Mešarsîä," etc.

Schwab I, l. 1, read פתיכרי ופתין[כ]רן נוקבתא —L. 5, כישוה מומין, "sorcery I exorcise."—L. 12, read רשם שמה ונ' "inscribed is the name whereby heaven and earth are bound."

The transliteration of Schwab M is almost untranslatable. As the first word read מומינא, "I adjure," which disposes of one of Schwab's proofs that these bowls were used in hydromancy.

In Berlin Museum no. 2416, l. 4 (Stübe = Wohlstein, l. 5)* and repeatedly below, רלשתהוק = "whom I have cursed." In l. 20, etc. the demons are bidden to depart from the sorcerer's client and transfer themselves to any persons he has cursed.—For דביה, l. 6 (W. 8), see below, to 2: 2, and for דיחביה = "of Yahwe," l. 15 (W. 22), see 13: 7 and 26: 4.—רוא, l. 22 (W. 31) = "on ground of, in the name of the Mystery."

In Wohlstein, no. 2422, l. 16, טעוהא is plural of the Targumic טע, "false deity;" the same plural is meant in טעוהא, no. 2426, l. 5.—In no. 2417, ll. 3, 6, רבתי דבתי read רבתי. Then אמי רבתי = "my grandmother," and אלהא ר' = "the great goddess."

* Stübe's text is much the better.

II. SCRIPT AND LANGUAGE

§ 4. INTRODUCTORY

In the following notes I shall confine myself almost entirely to the bowls at Pennsylvania. The absence of facsimiles or of good ones in a large number of the published texts prevents a proper control over those texts. Moreover there is some advantage in confining the study to a single collection of texts whose age and provenance can be exactly fixed as in the case of the bowls from Nippur. At the same time what is true of these texts is found to hold good for other published inscriptions.

Our material may be divided epigraphically and dialectically into three classes: (1) Of the "Rabbinic" dialect in the square character; (2) of a Syriac dialect, in a novel form of Estrangelo script; (3) of the Mandaic dialect in its peculiar alphabet. Bowl inscriptions of the first and third classes have been published; but so far no Syriac text has appeared with the exception of one essay noted p. 16 and in § 6.

Some apology may be necessary for the term "Rabbinic" dialect. As used here, it does not imply that the rabbis or the Jews in Babylonia had a special dialect,—they spoke the native dialects; nor that there is any unity in the language of the Talmud, which is alive with dialectic varieties.¹ But the Talmud is practically our only source for a certain family of Aramaic dialects in Babylonia, easily distinguished from the two other literary dialects, the Syriac (Edessene) and Mandaic. The name chosen is a convenient handle.²

§ 5. THE RABBINIC TEXTS

A. Script and Orthoepy

Ellis, who made the first attempt at decipherment of bowls in the square character, was inclined to find in them a very primitive script, antedating the Christian era.¹ Levy proceeded in a scholarly fashion and analyzed each character—to be sure, with rather scanty epigraphical resources;² he came to the conclusion that the bowl he was treating was to be assigned to the seventh century. Chwolson severely criticized Levy's method, and on the basis of the palaeographical material in his Corpus assigned the bowls of Ellis to various early dates (col. 118). Ellis 1 he assigned to the first Christian century; for three others he gave a graduated chronology, placing them in the second, third and fourth centuries respectively. But Chwolson's own method is somewhat of a reductio ad absurdum.³ It is hazardous to assign a date for these bowls on palaeographical grounds; it is impossible to relate the various variations of script to each other by a chronological scale. For instance the contemporaneous character of many bowls at Nippur is shown by the recurrence of the same persons and families in the texts; indeed the same persons appear in texts of different dialects, yet these inscriptions differ greatly in script. But there is no reason, at least in the Nippur bowls, to assign them to different ages; from the interrelations between them, personal and phraseological, I am inclined to assign them to the same period. Indeed they might all have been written in the same year, so far as palaeography may say anything. The differences are chirographical, not palaeographical. Some of the scribes wrote a neat, even a beautiful hand; but many were written by careless scribes, and many by illiterate ones, probably often by laymen, who affected to write their own prescriptions. The comparative plate of characters presented by Levy offers a large number of variations in the forms of many letters: for כ and ך eleven each, for ט eight, for ן and ש six, etc. Now when one short text offers so many varieties in forms, it is impossible for palaeography to give any nice chronological estimate. In fact the ruder the letters are, the more archaic they appear; yet they may be mere degenerations of the standard type or survivals of an elder one persisting in obscure quarters.

³ See Hyvernatt, p. 140, on Levy and Chwolson's arguments.

One need but take a glance at Euting's alphabetic tables at the end of Chwolson's Corpus to recognize that the Hebrew square character has remained essentially the same since near the beginning of the era. The earlier evidence is drawn from monuments, the later from manuscripts, while in the long centuries of scribal reproduction the Jews have developed as it were a conventional ductus, whereas earlier there was far more room for variation when this family of the alphabet was not confined as a vehicle of a school of religious scribes. Thus ן is one of the most Protean of forms, but apparently all varieties are found in almost every century of the first millennium, according to Euting's showing.

In the palaeographical table attached to this work I give specimen alphabets drawn from the bowls. But a fine analysis for chronological results would be unprofitable. For a round date the bowls might be placed on palaeographical grounds at about 500 A. C., but this date might be carried further back or further down according as other evidence might be adduced.

The finial letters are used, but with few instances of finial ץ. A phenomenon that presents some difficulty is the practical identification of ך and ך and of ן and ן. In the case of the former pair, they are often distinguished, the ך being then represented by a short stroke or sometimes by a small angle, the ך by a long stroke; but there is no consistency in this differentiation, and the ך is easily prolonged into a stroke like ך; within the same text or line or even word, the ך may be written both ways. This confusion has led to the barbarous appearance of many of the edited texts, on which Nöldeke has animadverted.⁴ The confusion throws doubts on certain vocalizations,—e. g. is it שׁוּבְטָא or שׁוּבְטָא?—and it is of grammatical moment in the verbal endings ן and ן, where, because of the recession of the stroke of the ן, the vowel letters are not at all distinguished.

There is no distinction between ן and ן in the Nippur bowls, and the same is true of the other published bowls, so far as I can observe. The ן includes ן. It is the same phenomenon that appears in the Mandaic, where ן has been retained only as a pronominal suffix. This identification is the representation of actual speech, in which our scribes no longer distinguished between the two gutturals, even as in the Mandaic. As the Babylonian Talmud distinguished between them in its text, we may surmise that the better educated preserved the difference at least in spelling.*

The final â-vowel is expressed by ן, less frequently by ן. Some texts use the latter consistently, and there is hardly a text which does not give an instance of this spelling. It is used regularly for certain common words, e. g. לילי; and especially when the word contains an ן, e. g. אנה, אפרה. This is a primitive type of Aramaic orthoepy, but the Samaritan dialect has preserved it, and an early Palestinian amulet, published by me elsewhere, shows the same features.⁹ The phenomenon is unique in late Eastern Aramaic.

The vowel letters ן and ן are used abundantly, always in terminal syllables and for long vowels, and very commonly for short vowels. Yet there is variation in this respect, even in the same text. On the whole ן is sparingly used as a vowel letter, preferably to indicate the feminine plural, e. g. ליליאתה, yet indistinguishable ליליאתה is as frequent.

It goes without saying that there are no vowel points. In one bowl (No. 13) a kind of pothook has been used to separate words, and here and there a point has been used, but this is the extent of the punctuation. Sometimes a scoring is found between the lines of script and by means of vertical lines phrases are blocked off; these are generally magical combinations. In No. 22 one word is written in a clumsy Syriac script and in one of Ellis's bowls a Syriac ן is once used. Quite a peculiar script is found in No. 30, and ן has a unique form in No. 22.

⁹ JAOs, 1911, 272.

B. The Language

The grammatical phenomena in the bowls from Nippur can for the most part be exemplified from the Babylonian Talmud, and like the latter they present various dialectic types. On the one hand they have close connections with Mandaic and on the other they show some Syriac idioms.

As in the Mandaic orthoepy the šwā is frequently designated by י, a circumstance which throws light upon the minor vocalizations. I may notice ביתיהן, אמיהן, "their mother, house," etc.; ניקבתא, pl., אילתא; with prefixes: בישמכרי, לימרומא; דישמלהן, "their left hand;" and with ו, ויבתא, "and daughters;" וילא, וילשלכון (a punctuation appearing also in Targum Onkelos, see to 3: 3).

In the consonants there is the yielding of the harder sounds, e. g. איספנדרמר, איספנדרמא, varying with איספן, איספן; indeed צ has become a very rare character. In general the gutturals are preserved, though ח and ט are no longer distinguished. In one bowl, No. 6, which has other Mandaizing characteristics, are found אחא = עחא, ניפאק, עחא, פאקע ו, ניבר, עבר ו. The same bowl offers חשילמן, with the intrusion of a new vowel, as is particularly characteristic of Mandaic.¹

For the pronouns I may refer to the lists at end of Glossary C. For their suffixal forms may be noted בניה, 2: 4, and even בנה, 11: 9 (etc), "his sons," עלה = עלוהי in duplicate texts (see to 11: 9), as common in Mandaic, and appearing also in the Talmud. For the 2nd per. pl. fem. בי - is used for בין - (see to 7: 3).

The masculine plural is in י - and ין - indifferently, even in close association. טריא 8: 6 and the nouns in 13: 1 ending in יא are probably Mandaic forms of spelling, ē.

As for the verb, along with י as dominant prefix in the impf., נ takes its place in Nos. 6, 13 (along with two cases in י), 19, 25, 28. A Nifal with Aramaic ending appears in 25: 2, נטרתו, along with the ppl. ניסתרין. In 28: 1 appears a Syriac Ethpa'al, נישחחין. The n of the reflexive is rarely lost, yet e. g. חירחקן, חירחמן.

The 1st pers. sing. appears as קטלת or קטלת, for a verb of i-stem we have סליקת. There is found a perfect plural, אשתכון, as in Syriac.

Second feminine plurals, which are lacking in the Talmud, are found; unfortunately as the notes show, it is not always possible to decide whether a form is singular or plural, and there is the awkward confusion of ין and ין- . In 6: 9 תיתכבשן is certainly plural, and doubtless the masculine plural termination (as in Hebrew) is to be understood in preference to -in , which would be the singular. It is uncertain whether שקירי 11: 8, 26: 6, is fem. singular or plural; in the duplicate text to No. 11, the plural is evident.

For the few cases of the quiescence of ע in verbal forms, see above. In א פ"א roots we have, e. g., תתסי , אתאסרו . Unique is the final loss of the ל of אול in the participial form אוינא , 6: 6. For forms of הוא we have תיהי , תיהי (both in the same text), spelt elsewhere תהי , תהי . The masc. plural of the participle appears as הון , הי ; cf. רמן , מחן , from מחא , רמא .

As to the prepositions there is the interchange of ל and על , as in Mandaic. Also observe the occurrence in the same line of קדמוחי and קראמיה , 3: 7.

There is almost nothing peculiar in the syntax. I note the occurrence of an old-Aramaic idiom in ביתלהון , "their house," 1: 6; also the unique idiom, if the text is correct,— ו תעיס , "and also," 1: 3 (cf. Latin, simul ac).

* See Levias, Grammar of the Aramaic Idiom Contained in the Bab. Talmud, § 188.

§ 6. THE SYRIAC TEXTS

In our collection appear seven bowls of Syriac script and language,—the first of this category to be published with the exception of the poor facsimile of a probably similar bowl, accompanied with an unintelligible transliteration, in Layard, Nineveh and Babylon, p. 521 f.¹

A. Script and Orthoepy

The script reveals itself as belonging to the Palmyrene-Syriac type, and that we are dealing not with a mere autographic "sport" is clear from the fact that two or three hands have written our seven texts. It agrees with the Palmyrene and Edessene in pointing ܐ, and with the former in not distinguishing ܐ. The Seyâmê or double points are used; this mark is generally written on the last letter, but occasionally, generally for reasons of space, on an earlier character. Once the two points are written vertically, 33: 5; they may include the points of ܐ, and in 34: 6 ܐ appears to have the two points one above and one below. The script provides the pronominal fem. suffix ܐ with an upper point, an ancient distinction in literary Syriac.² But there is marked distinction from the Edessene type in the absence of ligature; letters may touch one another, but they are not purposely written together.

In examining the individual characters (see my Alphabetic Tables) we find that ܐ, ܐ, ܐ, ܐ agree with the types of the Estrangelo alphabet, and ܐ and ܐ approximate the latter; but evidently our novel alphabet has had a history independent of Estrangelo.

² In 34: 4 מֹשֶׁה, "Moses," is written with a point over ܐ—to represent the ܐ sound?

It reveals a family likeness with the types found in early Edessene inscriptions* (where the characters are independent and no points used). But the genealogy for the peculiarities of our script is to be found in the cursive Palmyrene script, with which the Estrangelo is also to be connected. See Euting's alphabetic tables, cols. 17-28, in Chwolson CIH; his tables in Nöldeke, Syrische Grammatik; the atlas to Lidzbarski's Handbuch z. nordsem. Epigraphik, and for the history of the cursive Edessene script, the latter work, p. 193.

This relationship appears in 𐤁 (n. b. the curving stroke of the head); in 𐤂 (the type in No. 36 is identical with the Palmyrene); in 𐤃 (with the head at almost a right angle); in 𐤄 (our character is practically identical with the Estrangelo, but the origin of the type is to be found in Palmyrene, and a type in No. 32 is the replica of the angular form presented by Euting, col. 26); in 𐤅; in 𐤆 reduced to a small stroke or coarse round mark on the line; in 𐤇 (with parallels in Euting's table only in cursive Palmyrene, see cols. 24-28); in 𐤈, which tends to a closed figure, and 𐤉; in 𐤊 (a small half-oval figure, primitive in form, corresponding most closely to the cursive Palmyrene); in 𐤋; in 𐤌 (preserving the ancient type against the Edessene development). 𐤍 is not found.

Of the remaining letters, 𐤎 is distinguished from 𐤏 by the diacritical point as in Palmyrene, but the figure of both characters faces to the right, a unique phenomenon. The character 𐤐 is unique, with its long curve extending far to the left, so that this feature becomes the characteristic and the head degenerates to a point;† but here again the Palmyrene type may be compared. The letter 𐤑 is sui generis, the medial character may be related to the Palmyrene; the final with its long stroke recalls the Estrangelo final 𐤒, but terminates in a fork. 𐤓 also stands by itself. There is a general resemblance between it and the Syriac types presented by Euting, in Nöldeke, cols. viii-xiii, representing the fifth to the seventh century. But those Syriac forms have arisen from the tendency to ligature, whereas our 𐤓 is innocent of any such purpose. I am inclined to think that it is to be related to a rather primitive form of π which consisted of a downward stroke to the left with a crosspiece near the top. Our type has simply reversed this, making the stroke downwards to the right, while the crosspiece comes at the bottom.

* E. g. Sachau, "Edessenische Inschriften," ZDMG, 1882, 142; n. b. no. 8.

† The nearest approach to this type appears in a similar character with a long tail in the Syriac MS. from Turkestan published by Sachau in the Sitzungsberichte of the Berlin Academy, 1905, 964.

This analysis of the script presented in our Syriac bowls exhibits accordingly an older type than the literary Estrangelo and the Edessene inscriptions; its most pronounced relationships are with the cursive Palmyrene, and it is to be regarded as an independent sister of the Edessene script. Withal no character shows a distinctly late type.

Epigraphically then this script is of much interest, as exhibiting an early local form of Aramaic alphabet, of Palmyrene type, existing in Babylonia. It may have been a commercial script which spread from the metropolis Palmyra.⁵ In § 14 the age of the bowls will be discussed; the script itself does not stand in the way of an early age, perhaps the fourth century, though other evidence may induce us to date the texts some centuries later.

Since the above paragraphs were finished and regarded as closed, my attention has chanced upon the Turkish Manichaean fragments from Turfan in Chinese Turkestan, and I find a striking resemblance in many characters of the alphabet there used (which is an offshoot of the Syriac script) to those of the Syriac type before us. I may refer here to the discussion of the script by F. W. K. Müller in the Sitzungsberichte of the Berlin Academy, 1904, 348 ff., and the facsimiles published in subsequent volumes of the same journal, e. g. that facing p. 1077, in the volume for 1905. In my Alphabetic Tables at the end of this work I shall present the correspondence in parallelism. The Turkish script is very much younger than ours, but has steadfastly preserved the type inherited from Babylonia. Mani came from Babylon, a few miles distant from Nippur, and we must suppose that our script was the local use of that region, which came to be adopted by Mani and his sect as the vehicle of their literature.

The history of our script is thereby carried back to the third century, by which time it was well established. What was thus a local script came to be perpetuated as the literary instrument of the Manichaean sect,—a fate which has so often happened to various forms of the Aramaic alphabet. I have given further discussion of this matter in articles now in press for the Museum Journal and the Journal of the American Oriental Society. It may be added that there are no Manichaean traces in the bowls.

In the matter of orthoepy, while the forms without matres lectionis abundantly appear (e. g. ליליתא, plural; פתנמא, etc.), plene writings are also frequent, e. g. מלאכא, אימא, מיתקרא, חיחא, חילמא, כאמא, etc. There also occurs at times the confusion of ח and ה, characteristic in the square Aramaic texts and in the Mandaic: ח for ה in מחיילן 31: 5, חיחא 38: 3, פרחיא 32: 4; and ה for ח in אבחתהון ואימחתהון 36: 5, איתחפיד 36: 1. The same sorcerer or family appears to have written bowls in both the Rabbinic and Syriac dialects (see Nos. 33-35), and hence the natural contamination of the one by the other.

The extensive use of the Seyâmê in all plurals is to be noted: in the pronoun הלין 31: 5, the plural of the verb e. g. נחין 31: 6, the participle אחין 37: 8, etc.

B. The Language

The dialect belongs to the Edessene type; this is evident from the forms of pronouns and verbs. But there is extensive corruption from the type of dialect which has been literarily preserved in the Mandaic. This appears, as we have seen, in the Mandaic confusion of ח and ה. The 3rd sing. masc. or fem. suffix to a plural appears as ח; e. g. בנה, "his sons," 33: 13 (with Seyâmê), the same for "her sons" (with single point over ה) עילה (with Seyâmê), 37: 8, etc. We have observed the same phenomenon in the Rabbinic texts.

For other similar Mandaisms we may note: the equivalence of ל and על, 34: 10; the verbal form נעילון (from עלל), 34: 10 (see my comment); the pronoun עילה, 37: 8; בעירא for בירא, 34: 8, cf. פורא for פורא; אבוכן for אובכן, 37: 10; the construct שום, e. g. 34: 6. There are also some peculiar forms, e. g. חתומין 34: 1, משכנתא 34: 2, סוטיטא 35: 4; and a few rare or unknown words: ריאבולא (δαίμονες), דסתבירא, דרמנא. The numeral with the suffix תריהון 34: 4, is not classical, but is found in Targumic, Palmyrene, and Neo-Syriac. In 33: 10 לאפקון is Afel infinitive of נפק.

§ 7. THE MANDAIC TEXTS

A. Script and Orthoepy

The script of the Mandaic bowls is exactly similar to that of those published in facsimile by Pognon. The peculiarities of certain characters distinguishing them from those in the MSS. of the fifteenth and following centuries, as noted by that scholar (Une incantation, 12 f.), appear likewise in these bowls.¹

The 𐤀 is a large letter dropping its shaft obliquely below the line and recovering itself by an up-stroke at an acute angle. 𐤁 is a zigzag figure, or has an open, round flourish at the top. Following the traditions of the early alphabet 𐤂 and 𐤃 are similar, often indistinguishable; the former tends to a smaller head and a square angle at the top, the latter to a curving form like the end of a loop. 𐤄 is ligated at the top with the preceding letter. 𐤅 has, in Nos. 39, 40, a long leg to the right. 𐤆 appears in angular form, and also in a balloon-shaped figure. 𐤇 is a large letter rising well above and dropping below the line, sometimes in a free curve. Except that the drop is vertical, it is similar to 𐤈; we may compare the like similarity in the Palmyrene. In No. 39 𐤉 has the primitive form of two strokes at an angle, but leaning backward, and so allowing of ligature to the left by the foot. The left foot of 𐤊 projects itself obliquely in a straight line, and the extended stroke at the top distinguishes the character from 𐤋. In No. 39, 𐤌 has the later form, similar to the Arabic ڤ; with others, the body is fuller, approximating the p. 𐤍 is generally an angle lying upon the line, but in No. 39 it drops below the line, in two rough curving lines. 𐤎 has a large head, but does not drop below the line. 𐤏 is not found in these bowls. ρ appears as a closed figure, like a roundish Estrangelo ρ , with the left stroke failing to reach the upper line and curving back—probably for distinction from \mathfrak{b} . The ψ consists of two rough loops, which lie on top, or below, or on opposite sides. The η has often the simple form of the Hebrew η .

The suffixal η (which I represent by the same character in my transliteration) occurs at the beginning of No. 38, and is then dropped by the scribe; it may perhaps be intended in one or two other cases in these bowls. Otherwise it cannot be distinguished from \mathfrak{s} ; however, following the general practice I have always indicated the suffix by η . A similar uncertainty of distinction appears in Lidzbarski's amulet; in Pognon's bowls the distinction is generally preserved.

The peculiar sign for the relative, $\bar{\eta}$, has the shape known from the MSS., except that the vertical stroke at the left hand is often written without attachment to the first part. It always appears as a separate word, as is the case in Codex B of Petermann's edition of the Ginza, and apparently in Lidzbarski's bowls. I have followed the common editorial use of attaching it, like the Aramaic relative in general, to the following word. See the arguments of Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., 92, for regarding the sign as a peculiar development of η , not as a ligature of $\eta\eta$. But it must be asked why such a special sign should have been used. It appears to be a survival of the older Aramaic $\eta\eta$, and I would argue that the pronunciation di had survived until the formation of the Mandaic script. In these texts, as in the MSS., the relative when internal (e. g. after η) is expressed by η ; but this does not prove that $\bar{\eta} = \eta$, only that with the support of a preceding vowel the vowel of the relative was rejected.

The characters are spaced unevenly and in the case of unligated characters it is often difficult to ascertain with which word they are to be combined. The ligation is haphazard, there is no consistent attempt at consecutive chirography as in the later texts.

Apart from the bowl-inscriptions and Lidzbarski's amulets, all the Mandaic texts are preserved in late texts; the former are therefore important as the earliest monuments of the script. In § 14 I give evidence to prove that the Nippur texts are to be dated circa 600; at that period then the Mandaeans had elaborated their own alphabet with its peculiarities.

Investigations, which I may not expatiate on here, have led me to the belief that for the most part the Mandaic alphabet represents an early type of the "Syriac" alphabets; it is indeed often closely connected with the Palmyrene and Nabataean scripts. The sect itself must have arisen in the age when Gnosticism was rife in the Orient and before the domination of Christianity, and we have to suppose that it early developed its own peculiar calligraphy, after the wont of the various oriental sects of that age. Compare the remarks on the Manichaean alphabet, § 6.

As Pognon says of his text from Bismaya,² the language of the bowls is identical with that of the Ginza and Kulasta. The only difference is formal, in the sparse or varying use of the matres lectionis.³ I may cite: חוּינִיאָתָא, חִלְתָּמָא, עֵכֹרִיָא, עֵכָא, חִיא, חֲחֲמָתָא, נִכְרָתָא, where later א was used in the first or second syllable or both; we actually find חִיִּרָתָא, חִיא, חִיָּא.⁴

B. The Language

We may note the following syntactical peculiarity: the apparent use of the anticipatory pronominal suffix ה without the following relative particle ך, the suffix itself creating a kind of construct case-ending, the regimen being in apposition to the suffix. E. g. 40: 3: מְנַלְתָּה פַּת פַּתָּה ב' "the word of B's granddaughter." A similar construction occurs throughout Nos. 21, 22, 23 (q. v.); also a parallel instance in the Palestinian amulet published by the writer in JAOS, 1911, see note there, p. 278. In 40: 24 such a "construct" form in ה is used before a plural noun: בְּעִינָאנָה חִיִּיאִיתָא. Was it in the way of becoming a stereotyped case?

Apart from the references to "Life," these bowls are not specifically Mandaic in religion. Pognon's bowls are much more colored with Mandaeism. Under No. 11 it is to be observed that the Mandaic text there compared is secondary to the Rabbinic texts; probably in the Nippur community the Mandaeans got their magic from the peoples of other dialects. In Pognon's texts the spirit of the ancient Babylonian magic appears more strongly than in any other of the bowl-inscriptions.

³ Which Pognon strangely enough regards as "errors."

⁴ Nöldeke's expert judgment, in his review of Pognon, p. 143, that the language of the bowls is later than that of the Mandaic classics, may be noted here.

III. THE MAGIC OF THE TEXTS

§ 8. THE PURPOSE OF THE INSCRIBED BOWLS

The incantation bowls belong, with few exceptions, to one very specialized form of magic. They spontaneously suggest the art of "bowl magic," which, in various forms, is spread over the world, and which has a straight genealogy from Joseph's drinking cup to the spinster's teacup of our own day.¹ Ellis, the first commentator on the bowls, advanced the theory that, following an ancient and widespread therapeutic device, they were filled with a liquid which was drunk off by the patient who thus absorbed the virtue of the written charm.² This explanation has been generally given up. Layard objected that then the inscriptions would have been effaced by the liquid,³—which argument, though repeated by subsequent scholars, is not conclusive, for the magic vessel may have been preserved as itself a permanent prophylactic. Layard himself thought that they were used in places of sepulture and were charms for the dead, apparently relating them to the utensils placed in primitive graves. A number of Pognon's bowls are in fact endorsed with רבית קבוריא, "for the cemetery,"⁴ and Wohlstein's no. 2417 appears to be directed against the ghosts of the dead. But the bowls at Nippur were found in ruined houses, and in no case is a bowl intended for the service of the dead.

Schwab argued for the hydromantic use of the bowls.⁵ He makes reference to Babylonian hydromancy,⁶ and proceeds to quote a number of

Talmudic passages referring to Joseph's cup, magical beverages, etc., but he shows no connection between his numerous inscriptions and the method and purpose of hydromancy, which affects to give an oracle to men by the movements of oil or other floating objects in the liquid contained in the cup.⁷

Wohlstein attempted another explanation in the line of a kabbalistic dictum that no work of magic can be effected without the aid of a vessel (כלי).⁸ It was Hyvernat however who first, from the field of Jewish demonology, obtained the clue to the right interpretation of the practice we are considering.⁹ He refers to the Jewish legends of Solomon's magical ability to confine demons in vases, etc., and the parallel fables in Arabian lore of bottled up jinns, etc.¹⁰ As we shall immediately see, this is the correct explanation.

Pognon did not himself see in situ the large collection of bowls which he published in his Inscriptions mandaites, but he learnt from a native that such bowls were found buried just below the surface of the earth, and, generally, reversed, the bottom of the bowl uppermost, while at times bowls were found superimposed upon one another, the mouth of the one fitted to the mouth of the other (p. 1 ff.). Pognon does not guarantee the truths of these statements, but suggests in accordance with them the theory that the inverted bowls were prisons for the demons, who were confined by the virtue of the magical praxis. The expeditions of the University of Pennsylvania to Nippur have corroborated this theory by ocular evidence. Referring to the find of bowls above the Parthian temple, Hilprecht reports that "most of the one hundred bowls excavated while I was on the scene were found upside down in the ground,"¹¹ and he gives a photograph showing some of the bowls in this position. He draws the same conclusion as Pognon concerning the magical use of the vessels.

Finally, one of the Pennsylvania texts demonstrates that this was the conscious purpose of the bowl magic. No. 4 opens thus: מִיֵּלִי דְלִמְיָל

מלאכין קרישין וכל רוחי בישתא ו': "covers to hold in sacred (accursed) angels and evil spirits," etc.²² The same inscription announces to the demons that they are "bound and sealed in each one of the four corners of the house."²³ This magical method in fact gives a special name to the bowls; it is called a כִּיבְשָׁא, which literally means a "press." The same term appears in No. 6, which opens as follows: ו' לִשְׂרִי ו' כִּיבְשָׁא דְּכַבְשִׁין לְהֹן לְשִׁרֵי ו' "a press which is pressed down upon demons," etc. The theme is continued throughout the text: "This press I press down upon them" (l. 4); "who ever transgresses against this press" (l. 11), etc. In a word we have to do with a species of sympathetic magic, the inverted bowls symbolizing and effecting the repression and suppression of the evil spirits.²⁴

The quadruple use of the bowls also explains the frequent recurrence of identical inscriptions, e. g. Nos. 21, 22, 23, all made out for the same client. The four charms thus placed at equidistant points, which as cornerstones represented the security of the house, formed a circle of magical influence about the dwelling.²⁵

In the Babylonian magic we find a similar use of phylacteries buried under the pavement of the house. Botta, Layard and George Smith discovered under the pavement of buildings small receptacles in which were placed magical figurines, of composite human and animal form.²⁶ The use of the circular lip of the bowl is also in line with the magic circle which appears to have been practised by sprinkling a circle of lime, flour, etc. around a group of small images of the gods.²⁷

²² See the commentary to the text.

²³ The binding at the four corners of the house appears also in Pognon, B, nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 24.

²⁴ If my interpretation of the introduction of Nos. 9 and 14 be correct, we have also a reference to the formal depositing of the bowls.

Cf. the charm with a circle made by a ring presented in the Papyrus Anastasi, Wessely, Vienna Denkschriften, hist.-phil. Classe, xxxvi, 2, p. 34, and further PSBA, xiii, 165. The circle of the magical seal possessed the same efficacy.

But there is proof that the praxis of bowl magic existed in ancient Babylonia. In a passage of the magical Utukki series presented by Thompson,²⁸ we read a ban on an evil spirit: (a demon) "which roameth loose in an upper chamber, with a bason (kakkultu) without opening may they cover it." The editor in his note has recognized the form of magic indicated, without comparing it to the later bowls.²⁹

The bowl is then primarily a domestic phylactery, to be classed with the abundant forms of this species of magic, e. g. the Jewish Mezuzoth. An exorcism given by Wessely³⁰ from the papyri recalls much of the very wording of our texts: that evil spirits may not injure the wearer of these exorcisms, hide not "in the earth,"³¹ nor under the bed nor under the door nor under the gate nor under the beams nor under vessels nor under holes. The lurking of devils in the house (e. g. 1: 6), in the beams and on the thresholds (e. g. 6: 4), frequently appears in our texts, as also in the Talmud. Especially is the threshold named as guarded against the intrusions of evil spirits (e. g. 37: 2). The means of entrance are extravagantly detailed in a Babylonian text: by gate, door, bolt, etc., lintels, hinges, etc.;³² and door and bolt and threshold are exorcised.³³ The bedchamber is the special object of care, and the endorsement on No. 12, "of the room of the hall," may refer to a bowl which was deposited in that apartment.

A different application of the same magic is found in the bowls published by Pognon, which were found in a cemetery, many of them being inscribed "for the cemetery" (רִבְתָּ קְבוּרָא). This is the worldwide practice of laying the graveyard ghosts. I am inclined to think that duplicate inscriptions were made out, some for the house and some for the graveyard; this would explain the reference to the four corners of the house in Pognon, nos. 1, 2, etc. None of the Nippur bowls are so marked. Wohlstein's bowl no. 2417 is a detailed exorcism of ghosts.

But Nos. 13 and 28 pass from prophylactic to aggressive magic; they are love charms such as we meet in an early age only in the Greek world. I leave their consideration to the commentary, and only note here that a love charm is as much a karádeemos or defixio, to use the words of classical magic, as a ban of evil spirits. It is interesting to note that the Greek charms for defixing a rival in the circus or a lover were often buried in cemeteries, for the powers of evil were in any case invoked.*

The bowl itself is called simply, כסא or כוסא, also occasionally כסיעה amulet = φωλακτήριον, applied secondarily to a phylactery that is not suspended or worn (✓כסע).²² For other terms applied to it as a magical instrument, see § 11.

The tradition of this species of bowl-magic has lasted down into Islam, to fairly modern times. In his Monumens arabes, persans et turcs, Paris, 1828, Reinaud has given (ii, 337 ff.) a careful description of several Arabic magical bowls of brass and glass, contained at his day in private French collections and at the Vatican. They are talismans (to quote one of the bowls) against snakes, scorpions and dogs, against fever, pangs of childbirth and maladies of nursing, enteric diseases, sorcery and dysentery.²³ They are introduced "in the name of the merciful and compassionate God" (cf. the similar formula in our texts, e. g. 3: 1 and note), and are elaborately provided with quotations from the Koran and with references to holy legend and the power of God (cf. § 11). One reference indicates that they were inscribed at the propitious astrological moment, cf. below, § 11.

This is the only literary reference to bowls of this character I have been able to discover. In the possession of the Hon. Mayer Sulzberger of Philadelphia is a small, finely engraved brass bowl, with Koran quotations in Nashki. The text has been translated by Dr. B. B. Charles, Fellow of the University, who has kindly allowed me to present his rendering, as follows:

"This blessed bowl wards off all poisons, and in it are assembled tried virtues; and it is for the sting of the serpent and the scorpion, for fever, for dysentery (?), for indigestion, for the mad dog, for stomachache and colic, for headache and throbbing, for fever of the liver and spleen, for facial contortions, for lack of blood (insufficient blood supply), for annulling magic, and for the eye and the sight, and for use in giving to drink of water or oil, or for harm to enemies and for poison in the conclave of (two) lands, when the imâms of the religion and the orthodox caliphs are thereon agreed for the advantage of the Muslims."

Probably many such phylacteries are to be found in oriental households. Evidently the peculiar practice of the inversion of the bowl has disappeared; the vessel itself with its magical inscription has become "blessed," an efficient phylactery. But the use of the bowl is doubtless a survival of the magic we are discussing.

§ 9. THE EXORCISTS

The exorcist is in general anonymous; his personality is lost in his professional possession of occult powers which range far above personal limitations. By the age of our texts he had long been differentiated from the temple priest, or maintained connection with a cult only in out-of-the-way shrines or in the new theosophic circles that sprang up in the Hellenistic age.¹ A few points however may be noted.

Several of the Nippur texts² contain magical formulas worked in the name of Rabbi Joshua ben Peraḥia (Syriac, Rab Jesus bar P.), who is none other than one of the early Zugoth or Pairs who handed down the Tradition from the Great Synagogue to later ages (see to No. 32). Whether this magical tradition concerning the venerable Joshua be authentic may be dubious;³ but the case is illustrative of the tendency in magic to appeal to ancient great masters of sorcery, and to use their names as though their full powers were possessed. We may compare the many references in the magical papyri to such ancient masters, whose spells have become the stock in trade of their successors.⁴ The assumption of these quacks is well illustrated by a Jewish mortuary charm in which the magician thus introduces himself: "With the wand of Moses and the plate of Aaron and the seal of Solomon and the shield of David and the mitre of the chief priest" (I perform this spell);⁵ and this Palestinian charm has its parallel in our text No. 2: "I Pabak come, clad in iron and fire, vested with garments of Hermes the Logos, and my strength is in him who created heaven and earth." In 7: 12 the authority of Prangin bar Prangin is exercised—some sorcerer of the hazy past, if not a figment of the imagination. 'The great Abbahu' in l. 9 is to be explained in the same way, if it is not a misunderstanding of a Gnostic term, and so too Bar-mešael in l. 13, literally the 'son of the oracle-giver.' In some cases, e. g. the latter two and instances in No. 19, it is difficult to decide whether we have to do with men or divinities; the line was not drawn between the sorcerer and the deity, as in the Hermetic identification of Moses with Hermes⁶ and in the lively incident in Acts 14, where the people of Lystra deify Barnabas and Paul.

In one case, the pagan text No. 36, the exorcist presents his commission from the deities: "The lord Shamash has sent me against thee, Sina (the moon) has sent me, Bel has commanded me, Nannai has said to me. . . . Nirig has given me power." This is the survival of well known old Babylonian formulas, e. g. the Maḫlu series, i, l. 52 ff.⁷ "Anu and Antu have commissioned me, I am ordered, I go, I am sent, I speak, Against the might of my sorcerers Marduk the lord of incantation has sent me."

I am inclined to think that some of the texts, especially the more illiterate ones, were written by lay people. The "word of power" had become the essential element (see § 11), and like a physician's prescription might be copied by anyone, or even invented—for along with the belief in sorcery always goes a subconsciousness of its hocus-pocus. For instance, No. 2 is a mutual charm in which two men, in the respective halves of the text, exercise each his powers for the other. Are they professional magicians or not rather laymen who felt they could make a stronger defence against the powers of evil by standing shoulder to shoulder? The texts are often indited in the first person, e. g. Pognon 24; in No. 27 the clients of No. 7 appear as making the charm, and use the form of No. 2. But in general there is a breaking down of the distinction between personalities in magic; compare the Babylonian rituals, in which priest and suppliant appear to fuse in one another.

In one place Wohlstein calls attention to what appears to be an attestation of the incantation, inserted into the middle of the text.⁸ The obscure passage is: קימא דהוא כתיב לי אנן הכא ידעינן אורו. It may be translated: "It is correct for it has been written for me (or קי = קימעא?), we recognize it here." Cf. the attestations of the scribe in the Babylonian magical texts, e. g. the Maḫlu series.

§ 10. THE CLIENTS

Most of the inscriptions are of domestic character, being made out for a married couple, their children, their house, and their property, cattle, etc. Frequently it is the wife and mother who procures the charm, with or without reference to the husband. In many of the inscriptions there is special intention against the evils that disturb the domestic sexual life. And so No. 36 gives an exorcism for the bridal-chamber, No. 24 is a charm for the safe delivery of a pregnant woman. The bed-chamber is often specified (בית מיזבנה). There is frequent reference to the demons that slay the unborn babes (e. g. Nos. 36, 37), the charm is often made out for the children that shall be, as well as for those that are. It would seem that where women are concerned, the greater part of magic has to do with the mysteries and maladies of the sexual life. The Lilis and Liliths which predominate in the categories of demons are personifications of sexual abnormalities.

At times the idea of the family is extended to a wider scope, so as to include a large household; No. 29 is a good example; from the long list of male names enumerated, some of them of foreigners, it appears that the woman who procured the charm was landlady of a lodging house. On the other hand sometimes a single individual feels that a whole bowl is necessary for his own maladies; so in the case of the invalid who is the client of Schwab's bowl F.

As the individuals must be exactly specified we have a rich list of names, which is enlarged by the required naming of the mother, more rarely the father of the client.¹ In the Rabbinic texts we find the Aramaic names familiar in the Talmud, etc., Persian names, probably more frequent than the former, and but few typical Jewish names. In the Syriac and Mandaic texts the names are by a large majority Persian.² My texts contain one evidently Greek name, אסטרוֹבָא, Astrobas, and a Christian name, בֶּת סְהָרָא, Martyrofilia; the former is paralleled in a text of Lidzbarski's by טִימֹאחִיִּי, Timotheos, the latter by לִיעֶשׂוּ סַעֲבִירָא, 'His-hope-in-Jesus' in a text of Pognon's. Some of the names of obscure etymology may be of Indian origin; cf. the frequent name Hinduitha.

The large proportion of Persian names even in the Rabbinic texts might lead us to think that the clients were non-Jewish. The argument is somewhat fallacious as the Jews by no means stickled for their native names, in fact seem to have adopted foreign names with great avidity.³ And so in one family of nine souls the names are Persian, and only one son bears a Jewish name (No. 12). But as we shall have reason to conclude (§ 15), the magic of our bowls is so eclectic that even a "Jewish"-Aramaic text does not imply a Jewish exorcist, nor Jewish clients. We have to think of a clientèle partly Jewish, partly non-Jewish, to which the religious affinities of the magic were indifferent.

But the power of the charms is also extended beyond the actual house and its inmates so as to include the whole property of the client. Not only are house and mansion detailed, but also the cattle and possessions in general (קִנְיָא). In like manner Greek phylacteries provide a general property insurance, e. g. that the demons "shall not injure or approach N. or M. or his house or his vineyards or lands or cattle."⁴ matriarchal condition of society rather than to the elder principle, pater incertus, mater certa. Naming of the father probably occurs where the mother is unknown; for instances see to 10: 1.

§ 11. THE INCANTATIONS.

I have discussed in § 8 the particular praxis of our magic—the inversion of the inscribed bowl. There remain for consideration many details, for elaborateness is characteristic of magic and even in our comparatively simple field there are many phenomena which are suggestive links binding it with more complicated magical science.

Magic consists of two elements: the physical operation or praxis, and the incantation, or to use the Egyptian term, "the word of power."¹ They are distinguished in the Babylonian as the epešu "work" (also *kikittu*²), and the šiptu, words which appear rubrically in the magical texts. In the Greek the terms for the practice are πράξις, πράξις, χρεία; for the incantation (ἐπεὶ) λόγος.³ So in Latin facere is the word for the operation, and it has had an interesting history through factura, fattura, feitigo (Portuguese), into fetich.

The same distinction and similar terms are found in our magic. The root עבר, "work, serve"⁴ (late Hebrew עשה (cf. 14: 1), מעשה) is used of the practice.⁴ It is the common root also for the service, the worship of the gods in West-Semitic, and this fact illustrates the parity, often equivalence of religion and magic. Hence the technical terms עבדא ('ābādā), עבדא

⁴ Cf. Latin, colo, cultus. This Hebrew-Aramaic root is more religious than epešu, etc., with its idea of service. N. b. Arabic umrā, used of the cult at Mecca, Wellhausen, Skizzen, iii, 165.

⁴ A magical connotation of this root may exist in Is. 28: 2: לעבר עבדתו נבריה לעבר עבדתו, where the divine operation is contrasted to the magic arts of the necromancers.

('ubbādā), עבֹרָא, מַעֲבָרָא (ma'bādā), occurring frequently in the bowls, and in such expressions as עֲבִידְנָא עֲבָרָא (9: 2), and עֲבֹרָא דְעִבִּיד דְחֹוּ.⁵

The spoken Word is represented by מִלְתָּא, "words," etc., also technically by קְרִיתָא, once בַּת קַל דְקִרְיָא 16: 10, = the Greek ἐπικλησις (also ἐπισησις) used both in magic arts and also in the Christian liturgy (in baptism, eucharist, exorcisms),⁶ though as we shall see, most of these words came to be regarded as part of black magic and were avoided by our exorcists. The incantation as written is called a כְּתִיבָתָא and by the unique word dastabira,⁷ and also a רֹא, "mystery," 3: 1.⁸

A very large number of terms is used to express different practices and nuances of magic, but most of them only in the lists of dreaded black magic (see § 12), and hence they are avoided by our exorcists.⁹ The exorcist gives himself none of the technical names, e. g. from the roots כִּשַׁף, אִשַׁף; he speaks of his עֲבֹרָא, but מַעֲבָרָא is avoided. His adjuration is a מוֹמִיתָא, the Babylonian mamitu, "ban," and he employs the corresponding verb מוֹמִינָא; a more frequent equivalent is שָׁבַע, Afel. Once he uses the root אִשַׁף: אִשְׁפַּנָּא בְּאִשְׁפָּא דִּימָא: אִשַׁף 2: 3. But his favorite terminology for his own practice is derived from אָסַר, "bind," exactly equivalent to the Greek karadeiv, Latin defigere; the charm is an אִסְרָא, אִסּוּרָא. Also the synonymous roots are used less frequently: צוּר, קָטַר, יָסַר, מָסַר, מָצַר, פָּכַר, חָבַר. The last root is used of magical practices in this sense in the Old Testament,¹⁰ where also the obscure כִּסְחָתוּ, Eze. 13: 18, is probably from a Babylonian root of like import.¹¹ In the Babylonian the "binding" power of magic is as prominent as in the western magic; I cite such passages as

⁷ See 32: 4, and Kent's discussion in JAOS, 1911, 359.

⁸ The original use of this word (= reherh) appears in its designation of black arts; see § 12.

the Maḫlu-series iv, l. 9; vii, 66, in which this idea is expressed by several synonymous verbs.

The roots בטל, Pa., "annul," נור, "prohibit," חרם, "be in taboo," שמת "lay under ban,"¹² frequently appear. Also חתם, Peal and Pael, is frequent with the sense of sealing the demons with the magic word or device engraved on a seal—often with explicit mention of Solomon's Seal; hence the reference to the 70 seals of Solomon (Hyv.), or the seal of the house of Enoch, 19: 17, the seals of the angels of the Most High (Hyv.).¹³ Our magicians will work only white magic, and their whole effort is for the אסתות,¹⁴ salus of their clients.¹⁵ The great magician Joshua b. Peraḥia is an אסיה רבא, "great healer," 17: 12 = 34: 2. In this prophylactic nature of the magic, our texts differ favorably from the western καταδαιμονισμοί and defixiones. The incantations largely consist in the monotonous repetitions of these equivalent roots.

As to the praxis of our magic we have little information additional to that presented in § 8.¹⁶ From Pognon's texts we learn that the bowl was a new one (B. no. 24) and that the sorcerer sat upon an uncleft rock, a survival of primitive religion.¹⁷

The rude figures and designs which can hardly be said to adorn the bowls are part of the praxis. They come down from the earlier and more realistic age when gods and demons were represented by simulacra and in this wise were manipulated so as to do the sorcerer's will.¹⁸ Most of the ¹² Stübe explains the equivalent שיפורי in his text as denominative from שופר the horn of excommunication.

¹³ For sealing as equivalent to placing the magical name on the object, see Heitmüller, op. cit., 143, 249, etc.

figures represent the demons, generally as bound and hobbled—i. e. רגיל, אסיר, etc., to use the words of the incantation.¹⁹ Especially the liliths are so represented, e. g. No. 8, but also there are masculine figures like the military-looking demon, in Persian style, of No. 3. Some of the gruesome caterpillar-like designs are intended to "raise the hair" as did the demons of elder Babylonia.²⁰

In one specimen, No. 15, the figure is the design of the serpent with its tail in its mouth. This is surely of Egyptian origin, doubtless through a Hellenistic medium. Such a figure is described in the "Book of Apep," of Ptolemaic compilation,²¹ and prescriptions for drawing this magical figure are found in the Greek papyri.²² Very common—so in the Syriac bowls—is a circle with a cross in it; or the circle is divided into segments with a cross in each. These signs probably represent the magical seal. There also occur rough rectangular figures divided into compartments, representing the walls of protection which magic casts about the client.²³ Wessely gives a facsimile of such a magical design:²⁴ a square within a square, the former being divided into three compartments; I suppose after the plan of a double-walled and many-chambered castle, indicating the protective character of the charm.

In one case, no. 8835, a cross-shaped figure may represent a dagger, and so indicate one of the magical forms of defixio or fastening down of the evil spirits.²⁵

In No. 4 it is evidently the sorcerer who is depicted, waving in his hand a magic bough. This is the use we find in Babylonian magic, in which a branch of the datepalm or tamarisk was held aloft to repel the demons.²⁹

One detail of universal magic appears in the praxis of our bowls: the assumption of a suitable season for the exorcism. So 6: 5: "this day out of all months, this year out of all years"; cf. the mutilated (and probably misunderstood) form of this formula in 17: 1. In Wohlstein 2422 a day is given: "If you come on the first of Nisan, go away," etc. Nisan 1 was an auspicious day for expelling demons;³⁰ this was probably due to the belief that the great turning points of the year, the solstices and equinoxes were times of supernatural determinations of human fate, when responsive action on the part of man was especially effective; in the Babylonian calendar Nisan 1 was the day of Destinies, the Jewish New Year's day in Tishri has the same character, and compare the magic time of midsummer night and the Christmas season in more modern superstition.³¹ In old Babylonia certain days were propitious for exorcism, and they are listed, as personified, in a Šurpu text, among them the 7th, 15th, 19th, 20th, 25th, 30th, of the month.³² We have fuller information of this notion from Egypt; papyri are preserved giving all the days in the year according to their character as propitious or unpropitious for magical rites.³³ The same use of seasons appears in the Hellenistic papyri, those continuators of Egyptian magic. Among the numerous passages I note the following: ἐνανταὶ ἐξ ἐναντιῶν, μῆνας ἐξ μηνῶν, ἡμέρας ἐξ ἡμερῶν, ὥρας ἐξ ὥρῶν, ὁρμίζω πάντας τοὺς δαίμονας.³¹ This is exactly the equivalent of the passage cited above, 6: 5: יומא הדין מיכולהון יומי וירחא הדין מיכולהון ירחי ושחא הדא מיכולהון שני ועירנא הדין מיכולהון עירני, and there can be no reasonable doubt that we have here the reminiscence of the Hellenistic formula. So again in the papyri: ἐν τῇ σήμερον ἡμέρᾳ, ἐν τῇ ἡρᾷ ὥρᾳ.³² At least the later magical calendar is connected with astrology; one Greek exorcism adjures "by the God who has the power of the hour."³³ These references to an appropriate magical time are in our texts however quite conventional; we may judge that no horoscopes were cast by our sorcerers.

But the praxis is a minor part of the bowl-magic. In this it differs from the Babylonian in which the praxis was primary, the texts being illuminative of the action. The reasons for this shifting of the center of gravity I shall touch upon in § 15. In the bowls the incantation, the spell, is almost the all in all. It consisted in the utterance or writing of certain phrases, words, syllables, which possessed in themselves a magic power to bind equally the favorable powers and the demons.³⁴ This use of spells has gone so far that magic appears to have divorced itself from religion; the inversion of the bowl and the monotonously repeated declaration that the demons are "bound, sealed, countersealed, exorcised, hobbled, silenced," etc., e. g. Nos. 2, 4, is in itself sufficient, without invocation of, or reference to, the divine powers.

Generally however appears the formal adjuration of Deity or of deities and other favorable genii, the invocation of their name securing their assistance.³⁵ This may be specifically the Jewish deity, e. g. No. 14,

³³ Wünsch, Antike Fluchtafeln, no. 3, l. 20.

³⁴ The conscious manipulation of words, phrases, pronunciations to extract their magical sense, appears in 9: 5 = 32: 6.

"in thy name ὙΗΩΗ"; or it may be quite indefinite as in the recurrent introductory formula, "In thy name, O Lord of healings, great Healer of love"; the same form also appears in the pagan text No. 19. I discuss under No. 3 the origin of the phrase.

There is nothing new in the adjuration of many angels¹⁸ or deities along with the appeal to some one Name;¹⁹ the former is the Jewish phase of polytheism, while even with polytheistic adjurations there may be recognition of "God," as in the pagan text No. 19 with its reference to "the one true God," l. 17. Noticeable is the easy passage from the invocation of celestial beings into that of mere names or words; but this illustrates the arrant nominalism into which magic had fallen, losing the religious phase of divine personality. So Abraxas is invoked—though probably here we have a very ancient divine name, inherited from Egypt.²⁰ Of this "the holy Agrabis" may be a perversion, 14: 2. In 7: 9, as noted in § 9, "the Great Abbahu" may be a magically deified sorcerer.²¹ Many of the odd names which are invoked may be kabbalistic (gematriac, etc.) names of angels or gods (see § 13). They may soon have worn down into unintelligible words—just as Αβραξας = 365 becomes אברכים (and other forms) without reminiscence of the numerical value of the letters.²² We have the same unintelligent invocation of names in the magical papyri, e. g. the exorcism "in the name of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Jesus Chrestos, Holy Spirit."⁴¹ This is not Jewish magic, any more than we can say that the erotic charm from Hadrumetum is Jewish in its present form with its barbarous spellings for the patriarchs: Αβρααμ, Ιακωβ, Ιησοου.⁴² These are specimens of eclectic magic with pagan and Jewish elements, overlaid with Christian.⁴³ It is in this eclectic character of our texts, as in all so-called Jewish magic, that they part company from the old Babylonian magic and relate themselves to occidental conjuration.

The invocation of angelic names in Jewish magic may be regarded as in part the parallel to the pagan invocation of many deities, and in part as invocation of the infinite (personified) phases and energies of the one God.⁴⁴ Both Jewish and pagan magic agreed in requiring the accumulation of as many names of the deity or demon as possible, for fear lest no one name exhaust the potentiality of the spiritual being conjured. The aggregation of divine epithets in the Old Testament, as also in the Christian liturgy, goes back to the root-idea of the efficiency of a knowledge of all the names if possible; the fifty names of Marduk, the hundred names of Allah, are similar cases. In the Babylonian magic⁴⁵ and also in the Egyptian⁴⁶ this practice was established. For Hellenic magic may be cited the many names of Hekate, the ἑκατακταί.⁴⁷ In this accumulation

⁴² For the text and literature see to No. 28.

⁴⁴ Cf. the Gaonic maxim that there are many things in which the angels are independent of God, Blau, op. cit., 92; with which contrast the notion of the ephemeral existence of the angels who proceed from the Dinûr of God; Weber, Jüd. Theologie, 166, Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, ii, 371—all but Michael and Gabriel according to a dictum of Bereshith R. (Lueken, Michael, 39). of divine names there lurks the uncertainty whether they are names of one being, or, as so many potencies, names of as many beings. This confusion appears in the parallel texts under No. 11, where the second (Myhrman's text) turns the three names of the Jewish God in the first into a polytheistic trinity. But except in the case of accumulated magical syllables, the "barbarous names" of Greek magic, the Deity is not in our texts given many names; this is due to the fact that the reference to the Deity is not much more than a passing compliment. However the names of the demons must be exactly known, and especially is it the Lilith who receives an extravagant accumulation of designations; she is akin to Hekate and the "Hekatan names" are showered upon her. For the demoniac names I refer to § 12.

The use of so-called kabbalistic names—letters,⁴⁸ syllables, phrases—as potent charms, may next claim our attention. The roots of this usage are many, and the origin or etymology of specific cases mostly defy explanation. The practice is rare in Babylonian magic,⁴⁹ but is common in the sorcery of ancient Egypt⁵⁰ and in its lineal descendant the Hellenistic magic,⁵¹ and hence it was reflected to the Jewish sorcery, the Talmud abundantly illustrating the use of these barbarica onomata.⁵² One primitive source of this usage is the mystery which is thrown about magic rites; "the wizards that squeak and gibber" (Is. 8: 19) are universal; the Babylonian priest generally whispered his formulas (cf. the title mašmašu); the solemn parts of Christian rites have likewise tended to inaudible pronunciation. There exists a tendency toward intentional obscurity of the formulae, which by psychological necessity would tend to even greater corruption. But magic is in its purpose a scientific exercise, and we must suppose that in general something intelligible was once expressed by the now unintelligible term. Much of the later nonsense was the survival of phrases of the lost tongue in which the charms had their rise.⁵⁵ Such a part may have been played by Sumerian phrases in later Babylonia, and the great western sorcerer Apuleius recognizes the origins of his magical lingo as magica nomina Aegyptio vel Babyloniaco ritu,⁵⁶ and the Hellenistic sorcerer is said to ἀνέκρουσεν.

Some of the phrases are still intelligible, such as חַרַּשׁ, "quick" (off with you), with abundant parallels in the Babylonian and the Greek magic (the repeated ταχέ),⁵⁷ also brief imperatives, as וַע, וַח, or וַה, from וַעַע, etc., "fly away." But the great majority of the forms are unintelligible. It is to be observed that raucous sounds, e. g. קִין (kas) and especially sibilants are very frequent; in Pognon's texts ש (sh) is often inserted between words.⁵⁸ May we compare the hissing implied by the ancient Hebrew sorcery terms, שֶׁחַשׁ and נַחַשׁ?

Many such syllables or letters are surrogates for the divine name יְהוָה, which especially lent itself to this treatment.⁵⁹ So we find the changes rung on this word: יַה, יוה, יַהו, אַהַעַה, etc. Or abbreviations are used like the repeated א, = אֱלֹהִים, in 20: 2 it is extravagantly repeated six times, in 31: 8 eight times. In יַהֲהִיּוּ, 31: 6, we have a play on the three vowels as in Greek magic.

Then there enters in the use of the principle of Athbash, in all its various forms, e. g. מַצַּפִּין (Stübe, l. 66) = יְהוָה. Such prima facie unintelligible forms themselves became corrupted in course of time; perhaps MŠ MŠ, PŠ PŠ, 14: 2, are from the former theme. Probably too the principle of (mathematical) gematria may be supposed,⁵⁰ of old standing in Judaism,⁵¹ but also found in the theosophy and current use of the Greeks.⁵² The passage in 9: 5 f. which speaks of "letter out of letters, name out of names, interpretation out of interpretation," doubtless refers to the abstraction of such hidden meanings and values out of words.

In one case, 15: 4 f., occurs a rhyming "nonsense" couplet used with magical intention. For this as noticed to the passage there is one example in the Assyrian magic. Assonance of succeeding words is found, e. g. 35: 5.⁵³ Both assonance and rhyme are found in the western magic; e. g. adam alam betur alam botum,⁵⁴ and

ܕܐܪܬܐ ܐܘܪܝܐ ܐܢܝܐ ܕܐܪܬܐ ܕܐܪܬܐ.⁵⁵

I do not find much proof of intentional misspelling; most of the apparent cases are cleared up on inspection of the text. In fact a good deal of care is exercised in this regard (n. b. a case in 4: 4), and erroneous letters or words are often erased or repeated correctly; in form most of the texts compare favorably with the magical papyri.

⁵⁶ This identification of the angels recalls the assimilation of the gods in the famous Babylonian passage; "Ninib the Marduk of strength, Nergal the Marduk of battles," and similar astrological identifications; see A. Jeremias, Monotheistische Strömungen, 26.

An important part of the Word of Power in developed magic is the use of sacred scriptures, the epics, legends of the people, and the citation of appropriate precedents. Babylonian, Egyptian, Jew, Greek, each had his thesaurus of sacred legend, which age had consecrated as veritable words of Deity and hence in themselves potent.⁶⁷ These are "the ancient runes," שִׁירָא קְרִמָּא, of 32: 9.⁶⁸

Early house amulets have been found in Assyria inscribed with quotations from the legend of Ura the pest-god;⁶⁹ and there are other traces of the use of epic myth in the Babylonian magic.⁷⁰ In the same way that portion of the Book of the Dead known as "The Chapters of the Coming Forth of the Day," largely consisting of myth, and the Legend of Ra and Isis, were used in Egypt as magical texts.⁷¹ In the Greek magic we have the prophylactic and divinatory use of the Homeric verses.⁷² Nor were the Jews behind their neighbors, with their fast fixed canon of sacred scripture. The book of Deuteronomy ordered or at least suggested the use of the weightiest "word" in the scriptures, the Shemá, as a phylactery to be inscribed on the hands and between the eyes (in place of totemistic tattoo-marks)⁷³ and on the sideposts and gates of the house (where earlier prophylactic amulets like the Babylonian had hung). Or certain passages appeared palpably appropriate, just as the Ura-legend was used as a prophylactic; so Ps. 91, especially v. 5 f.; or the divine scolding of the evil spirit, "יְהוָה rebuke thee, Satan," in Zech. 3: 2. A few of the bowls published by Schwab, G (exterior),⁷⁴ H, K, O, are mostly or largely composed of scripture verses.⁷⁹ We find in them the Aaronic blessing, Num. 6: 24 ff., Is. 44: 25, Cant. 3: 7; K contains the whole of Ps. 121, Ex. 22: 18, Cant. 3: 7 f., Ps. 16: 1, 17: 8, 32: 7. O is an amalgam of Dt. 6: 4 and Ps. 91, with the first word of the former followed by the first of the latter, etc. G reads Dt. 29: 22 and then reverses the order of the words.⁸⁰ But these genuinely Jewish effusions are exceptional, and may be comparatively late. The Nippur bowls are marked by their lack of scriptural quotation and reference. Very frequent is "The Lord rebuke thee, Satan,"⁸¹ at the end of the inscription. No. 26 opens with the first words of the Shemá, followed by Num. 9: 23 and Zech. 3: 2. Num. 9: 23 is of value as containing the root שָׁכַר, a frequent and potent theme in Jewish magic. Biblical and of good magical tradition is the use of Amen (generally twice or thrice repeated), Selah,⁸² Halleluia. These are also used in Talmudic charms, e. g. Yoma 84a: "kanti, kanti, kaloror, Yah, Yah, YHWH, Sabaath, Amen, Amen, Selah." The magical Halleluia recalls the probable use of Hallel-like forms in incantations.⁸³ These Jewish terms are not found in the Mandaic texts, in which the sectarian doxology, "Life is victorious" replaces them. In the Greek papyri ἀμην and ἀλλελουια are frequent,⁸⁴ and we have a case of syncretism such as this: φοβηθήτω τὸ ἄμην καὶ τὸ ἀλλελουια καὶ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον.⁸⁵

But this use of scripture is not such as we should expect to find from any Jew even moderately versed in the Old Testament. The spelling is not Massoretic, the quotations are not exact.⁵² There are but two references to the supreme history of the Exodus, 14: 2, 34: 4, and the latter is confused. In the Greek papyri there is far more citation of the sacred history; cf. the "Jewish" text of the Great Magical Papyrus at Paris, published most recently by Deissmann.⁵³ This contains a brief summary of God's great acts for Israel, although the crossing of the Jordan precedes the passage of the Red Sea.⁵⁴ The "Judaism" of our bowls is often less than that of the papyri.⁵⁵

There are several references to ancient myth and apocrypha, especially in the citation of great spells. So 2: 4, "the spell of the sea and the spell of the monster Leviathan"; 1. 6, "the curse, etc., which fell on Mt. Hermon, Leviathan, Sodom, Gomorra"; 4: 4, "the seal with which were charmed the Seven Stars and the Seven Signs"; 10: 3, 5, "the seal with which the First Adam sealed his son Seth," or "with which Noah sealed the ark";⁵⁶ also see 34: 4 f.

All sacred and legendary history is a series of spells, just as the Babylonian epic literature is magically used, Ea or Marduk appearing as the high priest of exorcism. So also in Egypt the epic of the gods gives assurance of present magical help. "My two hands lie upon this child, the two hands of Isis lie upon him, even as Isis laid her two hands upon her son Horus." "O Isis, save me . . . even as thou didst save thy son Horus."⁵⁷ And so in the Greek papyri the adjuration is often by the wonderful works of the God of Israel, which are regarded as spells; see the great Magical Papyrus.

⁵² I cannot agree with Blau, p. 110, that this paraphrasing and variation in scriptural quotation was intentional; magic which perpetuated the pronunciation of the Great Name would not have hesitated at using the exact words of scripture. The quotations have often come through eclectic mediums.

⁵⁷ Wiedemann, Magie u. Zauberei bei den alten Aegyptern, 1905, 22, 26.

In this connection may be noted a few passages which appear to be derived from apocryphal or kabbalistic literature, fragments snatched to decorate the lean skeleton of incantation. E. g. 8: 13: "holy angels, hosts of light in the spheres, the chariots of El-Panim before Him standing, the beasts worshipping in the fire of His throne and in the water, the cohorts of I-am-that-I-am"; 14: 3: "I adjure you by Him who lodged His Shekina in the temple of light and hail"; or the poetic description of the angels in 12: 7: "They are filled with glory who endure and keep pure since the days of eternity, and their feet are not seen in the dances by the world, and they sit and stand in their place, blowing like the blast, lightening like the lightning."—beneficent Annunaki! These passages, reminiscent both of the Apocalypse and the later kabbalistic literature, are recited with magical intent.⁸⁸ An important part of magic was the epic of the god and the praise of his glory; compare the insertion of the Hermetic Κοσμοποίησις in the Leyden magical papyrus,⁸⁹ and the epic of the attack of the rebel spirits against the gods in the 16th tablet of the Utukku series. The story of the god's power or the praise of his glory were "words of power" against the fiends.⁹⁰

There is a dreary monotony in these texts, yet much variation of details. After possibly an invocation, comes the name of the client and family, and then the categories of detested demons and ills. Then follow the various Names in which the spells are invoked. Noticeable is the frequent repetition of the same form, even three or more times (e. g. No. 3). This insipid use has its parallel in the κατάδασμοι; cf. the examples in Wünsch. op. cit., nos. 3, 4, 5, where with slight changes the exorcism is repeated at least three times. Multiplication increased the efficiency of the charm; it is the βαρρολογία of the Gentiles (Mt. 6: 7). But the relig-

§ 12. THE OBJECTS OF EXORCISM; THE DEMONS, ETC.

The magic of the bowls is of too late an age to require here a dissertation on the rise and spread of the belief in evil spirits. Our sorcery is fin de siècle. When the old-world religions began to decay, and the gods that once were near to men disappeared in the political convulsions which marked the passing of ancient tribe or city and the domination of a world-empire, or suffered under the strokes of philosophy and skepticism, the spirits of ill were not banished, and the superstition that feeds on the fears of men, came to occupy the center of the stage of the spiritual drama. Nor did the rise of the great spiritual religions counteract the tremendous development of the superstition concerning the powers of evil, for they did not deny them, but recognized their existence, often regarded themselves in the negative light of prophylactics and antidotes against the great outstanding fact of evil agencies. The Persian faith was boldly dualistic and magical in its rites for overcoming the powers of ill. Jewish monotheism was too tense, and the cardinal doctrine of the one God was saved by that unfortunate, though possibly necessary, salvage from antique polytheism, in the shape of angels and devils who were nearer and more real to man than distant Deity.¹ The Christian Church followed the tuition of her mother and her pagan converts brought along with them the superstitions of the Graeco-Roman world; the doctrine of the Incarnation seemed to entail the foil of embodied demons, and diabolology entered into the formal Christian theology to an extent unknown in official Judaism.²

Our magic is a degenerate survival of the religious and magical developments of ancient Egypt and Babylonia, of the Hellenistic world, of Judaism, and in the study of its demonology, we are dealing with a mass of time-worn and banal demons, which do not promise much for fresh investigation. Nevertheless the analysis of the different kinds of demons may produce here and there a note of interest.

I have noticed above the magical efficacy ascribed to naming the names of deities and demons (§ 11).³ Personal names for demons, it is true, are not very common; they are generally epithets or generic terms, e. g. "the Killer, the Demon, the Satan," etc. One class of demons however seems always to have enjoyed the privilege of a long list of names which it was the sorcerer's duty to know and to conjure. This is the female demon represented in the old Babylonian texts by the Labartu, in the Jewish by the Lilith, in the Greek by the Gello or Baskania. Our text No. 42 is an exorcism of the evil Lilith and its virtue consists in the knowledge it gives of her many names; I refer to that text for comparative details. Likewise the Labartu has her six (seven?) names, which are to be carefully pronounced.⁴ We may also compare the accumulation of epithets attached to demons in 2: 2 f., 8: 2, 24: 13, etc., and recall a like process in the names of Satan in Rev. 9: 11, 12: 9, while Egyptian magic similarly amassed the names of the demon Apep.⁵ Also for further identification of the demons the names of their parents, or even granddams are given,⁶ for every specification enhances the power of the name. Also the personal description is efficacious, for this indicates that the sorcerer knows exactly whom he is exorcising. Such magical descriptions sometimes rise to almost epic tones, as in the delineation of the Seven Spirits in the Babylonian Utukki-series.⁷ A reminiscence of these hair-raising pictures appears in the Mandaic bowls published by Pognon and Lidzbarski, in which the hurting, scolding, fighting of the Lilith-witches is depicted in uncanny terms. But in general our texts do not extend much beyond the mere registration of categories; this decadent sorcery made up for the lack of poetical imagination by a mathematical tabulation. Superstition in order to be comprehensive encyclopaedically accumulated all the terms of evil; not only the inherited demoniac categories, but all which new races and faiths had to offer were gladly accepted. Hence in our texts the naming of the devils and ills results in the registration of an indefinite number of species.

An analysis of our general category may start from a threefold division, namely: (1) evil spirits, in the strict sense of the term, as personal beings; (2) evil agencies, especially the species of black magic, which have been potentized into almost personal existence; (3) natural evils, especially physical maladies, but also such mental and moral affections as loss, shame, etc.—which are regarded as instigated by demons, or as themselves evils with personality, although often the demoniac element is vague.

This is the order we find generally in our present texts. And it is antique. It appears in the Babylonian, e. g. in a text where the several evil spirits are named (Utukki, etc.), then "the enchantments, sorceries, witchcrafts," then "sickness."⁹ All the three categories do not so often appear in the Babylonian magic, more frequently those under (2) and (3) are paired, but here again we find the same order—the bans (mamitu) and then the various human ills.¹⁰ This order appears also on the whole in the Byzantine charms published by Vassiliev:¹¹ τὰ ἀκάθαρτα πνεύματα, ἡ βασκανία ἡ φαρμακεία ἡ φοβερισμὸς ἡ φρίκη ἡ πυρετός ἡ ἐπίβουλον ἡ συνάντημα παντῶν ἡ νοσηρὶν ἡ κωφὸν ἡ τυφλόν,—and so on with a list of diseases. Compare a papyrus list, in which are all celestial and terrestrial spirits, sins, dreams, bans, witchcraft.¹²

This is the natural order of the evolution of magic: first the animistic fear of demons, then the opposition to mortals who have bound the evil spirits to their malicious purpose, finally the more exact diagnosis of the maladies which are specified in secular terms. At the end of the development this last category may alone remain, as in the Babylonian medical texts or the modern Jewish and Arabic charms. It may here be remarked that the never-ending enlargement of categories of evil spirits, apart from eclectic causes, may be due to Persian influence, although hardly any of the details can be traced to that source.

(a) The most honorable place in the first division is to be assigned to the ancient gods and the spirits still haunting their temples, which the development of religion and especially the monotheistic trend had depotentized and turned into demons. The religion of yesterday becomes the superstition of to-day. Polytheism died hard. Even with the triumph of the One God in the Old Testament, there survived the belief in the many deities who appear as lieutenants of Yahwe, the בני האלהים (Job, 1), as capable of disobedience and subject to divine wrath (Gen. 6: 1 ff., Ps. 82), as the planetary spirits (Dt. 32: 8 [Greek], Is. 24: 21 ff.), as angels,—a more thoroughgoing assimilation with monotheism, though the angels at first have an independence and sovereignty recalling the Sons of God (e. g. Dan. 10: 13, 21, and Satan), or finally as evil spirits. The supreme declaration of Second Isaiah that the gods are naught and nothing, unfortunately was not sustained, and even onetime beneficent gods, when banished, returned as demons to vex the faithful. A classic expression of this demonology is found in Paul: "the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons (δαίμονια), and not to God" (I Cor. 10: 20).²² The fullest development of this theory is found in Mandaism, where the ancient spirits of the planets have become the chief devils. So also Mohammed reduced the pagan gods to Jinns.

These discarded deities may therefore head the list of evil potencies, and so we find in 38: 8: "Charmed be all gods (אלהים)" and temple-spirits and shrine-spirits and idol-spirits and goddesses (עשתרתא)." The old proper name of the goddess Ištar had already in the Assyrian become a common name of goddesses in general (ištarāti).¹⁴ In the heathen text No. 19 we learn of the sixty gods and the eighty goddesses (l. 8); the former figure is a survival of the ancient sacred number for the fulness of deity, hence the number of Anu;¹⁵ the "eighty" is merely cumulative.¹⁶ Once the rare feminine אלתה (in the Syriac, Pesh., etc.) is found, used of a female spirit (Wohlstein, 2417: 5).¹⁷

²³ Cf. the Babylonian ilāni līmūti.

Probably it is under Mandaic influence that we find the planets regarded as baneful spirits; n. b. the old myth of their fall cited in 4: 6 and the charms against sun, moon, stars, planets, 34: 6. For other demons of Mandaic origin¹⁸ see Pognon's list, Inscriptions Mandaites, 93; to these may be added from Ellis 1: 3 נירי, the Mandaic form of Nergal = the unlucky planet Mars, and אבטור,¹⁹ who here is transformed into an evil genius.²⁰

Under this head there is one interesting species, that of demons which are the spirits of the pagan shrines and simulacra, and so are regarded as haunting them.²¹ Again the forceful protest of Second Isaiah, of Ps. 115,

²⁰ For a list of these planetary spirits in the Mandaic cf. Lidzbarski's amulet just cited, l. 247 ff.

²¹ Cf. Origen, C. Celsum, vii, 35 and 64: the localities especially haunted by the demons are temples and shrines where they can enjoy the incense, blood, etc. Also the satire of Bel and the Dragon, had failed; there was a virtue in the cults and sanctuaries of the old religions. So the êkûrê appear in our bowls, as in the Mandaic books,²² as established deities. The word ekurru, once the name for a temple had already in the Assyrian become applied to deities, ekurrâti.²³ The temples themselves were personified and practically deified;²⁴ later superstition retained the idea by regarding the êkûrê as the gods of the temples, and so as gods in general; e. g. Lidz., iv: בשם אלחיא = עכוריא, שחין עכוריא זכוריא, where as the number 60 shows, עכוריא = אלחיא (cf. 19: 8).²⁵ Of like character are the פתכרי, or פתכרי, = פתחכרי (once, in Schwab Q: 5 פתכרי),²⁶ properly "images, idols," but used at large of gods in general; e. g. we read of "invocations of the gods, פ, and the goddesses."²⁷ There are פ of the upper, lower and middle regions.²⁸ In some of the lists they appear rather far down; e. g. 5: 2, ושירי ואסרי ופ' ונידרא, cf. the Mandaic passage, quoted from the Ginza, in Pognon B, p. 75, where they occur after the demons, devils, spirits, amulets, lilitis, being thus much reduced in grade. Levy translates the word by Gespenster;²⁹ in the eclectic magic of the time the word may have come to be identified with εἰδωλον, = both phantasm or ghost, and idol.³⁰ There is the distinction in the Talmud the reality of oracles at those shrines is admitted, although explained apologetically; see the argument in Aboda Z. 55a, cited by Joel, Der Aberglaube, i, p. 86. Cf. I Cor. 10: 28.

prevailing class of demons; they are the δαμόνια of the Greek, for which the Peshitto returns to the Jewish term.⁵⁵

As Judaism has its feminine שריות, so once we find reference to the אכנאיתא, 7: 14.⁵⁶ In 11: 5 = 18: 4 = Ellis 1, = Lidz. 5, we learn of a "king of demons and devils," with which compare Asmodaens, the king of the demons.⁵⁷ But in these texts his name is given as אכנאיתא, בננא, which is found in 19: 10 as name of an evil deity (בר חבאל), while the plural in the same text, ll. 6, 13, has evidently the meaning demons or deities. In a broken text (Pognon B, no. 24, l. 19), a מליכא ושרידיא occurs. In 29: 9 the šēdīn are described as בני טלא, "sons of shadow," cf. the טלני of the Targum.

The דייין inherited a good name from the old Aryan theology (= gods), were depotentized in the Persian system, and came into Semitic currency through the Mandaic and Syriac. (The word does not occur in Targums and Talmud.⁵⁸) In the Peshitto use of the term it appears to apply to the demons of mental and moral disorders, thus indicating something distinct from the šēdīn.⁵⁹

The "spirits" or "evil spirits" (רוחא בישא, רוח רעא) — רוחין בישין — both masc. and fem.)⁶⁰ form a triad with the preceding species. Levy and Blau regard them as ghosts,⁴¹ but without warrant, as the Rabbinic, Syriac and Mandaic use of the word shows. They are the πνεύματα πονηρά, or ἀσάθαρτα of the New Testament, the equivalent of the Babylonian utukki limnūti. This development of רוח we may trace in the Old Testament where "a spirit of evil," "the evil spirit," appears as an agent of Jahwe; like the Satan such potencies easily passed into malicious demons.

The Mazziḥin which are prominent in Jewish lore, where they are the general category for all demons,⁴² appear but seldom.

These devils, demons and evil spirits in their juxtaposition recall the several species so frequently enumerated in Babylonian demonology; e. g. as listed more than once in the Maḥlu-series, the utukku, šēdu, rābiṣu, ekimmu, labartu, labāṣu, aḥḥāzu, followed by the liliths.⁴³ But beyond the registration of several categories there is no equivalence in name (with one exception), in definite character.⁴⁴ A certain amount of distinction can be drawn in the Babylonian field, but in our texts no differentiation exists. Indeed the three species are rather tokens of the several sources of our particular magic, the Hebrew (רוח), Babylonian (שֵׁר), Persian (دِیو). The only reference to the "seven spirits" of Babylonian magic is in connection with the מבבלתא (see below).

But it is the Liliths which enjoy the greatest individual vogue in our demonology. Many of the charms culminate in that objective; the other evil spirits are most often merely general, anonymous, to whom the general compliment of a spell must be paid, but the Liliths are definite terrors, whose malice is specific and whose traits and names are fully known.

⁴¹ Opp. cit., p. 482, p. 14. The view that demons were ghosts of the dead indeed existed; see Justin Martyr, Apol., i, c. 18 and for later Judaism, Eisenmenger, ii, 427. They may have been specialized as the spirits of demoniac possession and moral temptation (see Blau). For the relation of רוחין and πνεύματα, see Baudissin in Hauck's RE, vi, 12 f.

The genus appears in the Babylonian incantations, as masculine and feminine, lilu and lilit, along with an ardat lili.⁴⁵ The two former words survived in Jewish demonology and both occur abundantly in our bowls, though the Lilin are only pendants to the Liliths. The origin of the word, whether Semitic from לִיל = "nightmare, nighthag," etc. with Schrader, Halévy, et al., or from the Sumerian lil, "storm," with Sayce,⁴⁶ Zimmern,⁴⁷ R. C. Thompson,⁴⁸ lies beyond my present scope. Probably as others have suggested, the resemblance of Sumerian lil to לִיל, "night," may have had its part in shaping the phantom of Lilith and her troop among Semitic-speaking peoples; but I would suggest that the prime connection is not etymological but semantic: lil = wind = רוּחַ = spirit;⁴⁹ Lilis and Liliths are specialized forms of רוּחִין.⁵⁰

In the Babylonian the Lilith (ardat lili) is the ghostly paramour of men, and her realm is the sexual sphere; hence women in their periods and at childbirth, maidens, children, are the special objects of her malice.⁵¹ Hence in the bowl inscriptions, made out for the protection of homes and the peace of family life, most often in the name of the women concerned, it is an amulet against these noxious spirits that is particularly desired. We may say that the Lilis and Liliths are the demons of the family life.

Texts Nos. 1, 6, 8, 9, 11, 17, may be referred to especially for the Liliths. They haunt the house, 1: 6, lurk in the arches and thresholds, 6: 4, one dwells in the house concerned, 11: 5. So in the Talmud they dwell in the beams and crevices, the cesspools, etc.,⁵² even as in Greek magic demons

⁵¹ See Thompson, l. c. et seq., who discusses the demonology of marriages with Jinns, etc.

⁵² Jewish Encyc., iv, 516b.—In 29: 6 f. (cf. l. 9) occurs לִילִיתָא בִישׁוּמָא וּבְשׂוּרָא, "the evil and the decent lilith"; this recalls the good demons of Jewish lore, שְׂרִיף טוֹבִין, are given the like habitat.⁷⁵ In No. 1 they are described as generating offspring with human folks, appearing as phantom men and women to women and men by night. Hence the interesting phenomenon of the magic get, divorce-writ, by which the sorcerer, like a Jewish rabbi, separates these obscene beings from their prey.⁷⁶ Especially do they vent their rage on little children as the detested offspring of human wedlock; they plague them, throttle and devour them, suck their blood (e. g. 11: 8, 18: 6, 36: 9, Lidz. 5). The name for one of these demons, in No. 36, is "Murderess daughter of Murderess," and "strangler." In the Jewish demonology the Liliths have the like fiendish character; Bemidbar Rabba 16 affirms that they kill children.⁷⁷ In No. 11 the Lilith is associated with the personifications of barrenness and abortion. The figure on No. 8 gives the picture of a typical obscene Lilith; she is depicted with loose tresses, one of the characteristics of the species, cf. 8: 3; cf. Nidda 24b, Erub. 100b. The later Lilith thus partakes of the nature of the elder lilit and of the Labartu, the enemy of children.⁷⁸

The Liliths are intimately known, their own and their parents', even the granddam's names are given, e. g. Nos. 8, 11. At the beginning of Wohlstein's text 2416 (= Stübe) a whole brood of demons is named.⁷⁹ Especially in the case of this species most exact descriptions are given of their foul ways and apparitions,⁸⁰ for the Liliths were the most developed products of the morbid imagination—of the barren or neurotic woman, Eisenmenger, ii, 431 f., and the good and bad šēdu of the Babylonian—also so the utukku, Fossey, op. cit., 449.

⁷⁹ See Wohlstein's note; the mother's name אִמִּי, "little mother," throws light on a passage in Pesah. 112a. In general these names are epithetical; cf. the demon Ahriman bar Lilit, B. Bath. 73a.

the mother in the time of maternity, of the sleepless child."⁸⁰ Somewhat of the elder and biblical notion of the Lilith as denizen of the desert appears in the expressions בנתא דברא, לילית דברה, 17: 3, 27: 7.⁸¹

A further development of the Lilith is her assimilation with the witch; the descriptions of the species in the Mandaic bowls recall the uncanny scenes of the witches' nights which are the theme of still existent folklore. The Lilith is the Baskania, (i. e. witchery) of the Greek charms.⁸² The epithets "cursing," and "undoing," e. g. 34: 13, belong to this phase of the Lilith-idea.

Very interesting is the similarity of the Semitic Lilith, and in course of time her assimilation to the psychological horrors which haunted men elsewhere, especially to the identical forms in the Graeco-Roman demonology. I refer to the Lamia,⁸³ the Empusa,⁸⁴ the Gello,⁸⁵ the Marmolyke and Gorgons, and the incubi and succubae.⁸⁶ In connection with the text No. 42 which presents the legend of the Lilith-witch, I take occasion to present the parallel forms of this conception as found in the western world. This developed myth is a later accretion to the ancient inchoate ideas of these monsters.

⁸⁵ For Gello as a lilith-name and as probably equal to Ass. gallu, see notes to No. 42.

A long list of species of demons still remains to be considered, most of which are not much more than names. One of the most frequent and evidently most dreaded is the class of the מַבְּלִין or מַבְּלָתָא. Once they are spoken of as the "seven כ" of night and day," 16: 7, recalling the Seven Spirits of Babylonian mythology.⁶⁶ Stübe (p. 59) suggests derivation from כַּבַּל, "bind," and Myhrmann (p. 350) compares Assyrian kabālu used in incantations. I venture to suggest metaplasia with the Syriac לִכַּר, "hold, seize," i. e. "take demoniac possession of," so that we may compare this species with the Babylonian aḥazzu.⁶⁷ Cf. καταλαμβάνειν, Mk. 9: 18, and the terms κατεχόμενοι and κάτοχοι, indicative of supernatural possession.⁶⁸

There are the evil angels,⁶⁹ who are called קְרִישִׁין = sacri, in 4: 1; the "angels of wrath and the angels of the house of assembly."⁷⁰ We read of the רִאשֵׁי מַלְאכָה, 37: 8, rites in which angels were bound to hellish operations. The word is used of pagan deities in 36: 5 (cf. 19: 13), even as ἄγγελοι appears in the papyri.⁷¹ The angel of death who shudders at the Great Name appears in 3: 6, Schwab F.

"The Satan" appears and also "the Satans," as in Enoch (40: 7) and Rabbinic⁷² and Arabic lore. There is no amplification of the doctrine of the individual Satan. Once with the Satans (35: 4) are associated the סוטימא and דיאבולא, the former a class of seducing spirits (metaplasm of $\sqrt{\text{סמא}}$?),¹³ the latter the almost unique Semitic transliteration of διδάσκαλοι. In 2: 3 are mentioned the מני ובעלרבי, the Fiends and Foes.

⁷¹ E. g. Dieterich, Abrahas, 192, l. 10; so also in the LXX, e. g. Ps. 96: 7, and an inscription cited by Cumont Oriental Religions, n. 38, p. 266: diis angelis.

The זיקן appear in association with the מזיקין. The Rabbinic and Syriac זיקא is a meteor, blast of wind, etc.; in the Mandaic it has the more general sense of a plague.¹⁴ The Mandaic has inherited an old Babylonian idea of the zakikū, "blast," as a demon, and then death-demon.¹⁵ The Satyrs, שעירים, appear once, 5: 4, a reminiscence, as the form shows, of the Old Testament.¹⁶ The שחורין of Schwab G are black devils; cf. the title of Satan ὁ μέλας, in Epistle of Barnabas, 4: 9.

In Hyvernat's text occurs the phrase נינא דשלמון, which Grünbaum most plausibly translates "the Jinn of Solomon."¹⁷ The word would then be one of a few terms in our texts which suggest Arabic connections (see שלניחא, שקין, below). But the reserve is to be made that, as Nöldeke maintained, the root is common-Semitic, and the spread of the word may well have antedated the Muslim Conquest. We may compare the god Gennaïos cited by Cumont in Pauly-Wissowa, vii, 1174. The גנרא of 37: 6 is to be explained from the Mandaic גנרא (Syriac גנרא Arabic jund), "troop"; devils molest their victims in bands, cf. the name "Legion" assumed by the demoniac in the Gospel, and the "tribes" (שורבתא) of demons in 38: 6; also cf. 13: 1.

¹³ Cf. 1 Tim. 4. 1, "seducing spirits and doctrines of devils."

¹⁴ So probably read for עקין in Hyvernat, l. 4; in 19: 13, עקיי.

¹⁵ Norberg, Lexidion, 55.

¹⁶ Muss-Arnolt, Dict., ad voc., cf. the šunu zikikū, "roaming windblast," Thompson, Devils, ii, 4. l. 27. For the simile of demons to storms, see ibid., i, 89, and compare the etymology of lilith (see above). For the word see 12: 8.

¹⁸ Probably to be read in 37: 10.

In 15: 6 and Myhrman l. 2 are found the יררין. The second ר is sure in my text; Jastrow's and Levy's lexicons give the word as a variant to ירודא, "ostrich," but doubtless the former is the correct spelling;⁷⁷ the root is onomatopoeic (cf. ילל, and English "howl" and "roar"), connoting a howling creature and was applied to the ostrich—so the Tosefta (see Jastrow); but in the Targums it generally translates the Hebrew ציידים, the uncanny creatures typical of desolation. In the Syriac, ירורא is jackal, translating תנים. But the Rabbinic references indicate that it was rather a fabulous than a zoological species, akin to the liliths, satyrs and vampires that haunt ruins, and this connotation appears in the Syro-hexaplar to Is. 34: 17, translating לילית by ירורא, while Symmachus gives zajia.⁷⁸ This equation gives the key to our present word. The Babylonians represented their demons in uncouth shapes of birds and animals.⁷⁹

Besides the use of certain generic terms, such as עשכנא, "oppressors," there remain several rare or obscure species: the לטבי, also לטאבי, probably metaplastic for batfālā, "undoer"; the לטאנא (alongside סטאנא No. 20, probably from root לטם "curse,"⁸⁰ or a form of the Targumic טלנא, "shade-demon." The שפטין in Hyvernat, l. 3, for which Grünbaum (p. 221) cites the Arabic šifāt, species daemomis, is probably to be read שבטין, "plagues" (see p. 80). For the נסי, possibly "familiar spirits," see to 6: 2.

There are also names of individual demons. Some can be identified: the חטפנא, corresponding to the Arabic ghūl (see to 8: 2); מר a deopotentized deity.⁸¹ Some are recognizable epithets: אברא 3: 2, מרובנא 37: 10, שריר Schw. F. Others defy etymology: אשתקתוקה Pogn. B, דקור 34: 10 (q. v. for a possible interpretation), רנחיש 3: 2, חמעה Schw. G. Long lists of such obscure names are found in Schwab F and G; these are probably on a ⁷⁷ According to Jastrow, Lagarde's editions of the Targums have everywhere this form; יללית appears as a variant in one place.

⁷⁸ See Field's Hexapla. N. B. the interpretations of the uncanny creatures in this passage as demons by both the Greek and the Targum.

⁷⁹ This word is to be distinguished from וריר, an eye-disease (see below); because of the uncertainty of the spelling of the two words the וריר at end of Schw. G may be the one or the other word.

⁸⁰ Cf. the Syriac שטנא.

par with the mystical names of the angels (see § 13).⁸⁸ Finally we may note the blanket-formulas for demons who are named and who are not named, and which have their parallel in the Babylonian,⁸⁹ and in the Greek magic.⁹⁰

There are comparatively few certain references to ghosts; the רוחין, etc., as spirits of the dead, may include them.⁹¹ One case in point is found in No. 39: "charmed the lilith that appears to her [in some shape]; charmed the lilith that appears to her in [the shape of ?] Tâtâ her niece; charmed all the defiling ghosts, דמוותא, that have entered, which appear to her in dreams of nights and visions of day." Here a definite ghostly apparition is really a diabolic delusion. Also Nos. 20, 25 contain general charms against ghosts. One technical term for ghost possibly appears, שלניא (see to 8: 2). The last of Wohlstein's series, 2422, appears to be directed against ghosts and is an interesting example of necromantic spell. Familiar names are given to the spirits and they are cajoled to do no harm. Also in Wohlstein, no. 2422 appears the רוח בית קברא ור' מיח' There is constant reference to dreams (חילמא) and apparitions (דמוותא, חיונא),⁹² which are the milieu of demoniac and ghostly apparitions, cf. 7: 13; hence שנושי ח', "disturbing dreams," in which phrase the noun is practically personified—a category of evil spirits. We have such a combination as: חוראריא ושואריא וחיונא (Pognon A), in which חר' are impure conceptions of the night (cf. חלם in Syriac); the second word, which Pognon does not explain, is doubtless the Talmudic שור, "leaper," exactly the Ephialtes of the Greeks, a kind of incubus.⁹³ This distinction of the dream from ghost or demon represents a later psychology. Charms against dreams are frequent in the Greek papyri; thus against ἐνέροντες φρενός,⁹⁴

Respectable or "white" magic includes not merely the laying of evil spirits but counter magic⁵² against the machinations of hostile sorcerers. Just so the Babylonian Maḫlu-series devotes itself to the rites of destroying the witch by means of simulacra which are consumed in the fire; the Greek magic has the same defensive purpose. The Mandaic texts recall somewhat of the ancient dread of witches with their description of those uncanny and obscene persons, and, as I have noted above, the witch and the lilith are practically identified.

It was most efficacious if the sorcerer were known so that he could be named and the "tables turned" upon him by casting upon him his malign arts, for no curse "returns empty." Such a case appears in Schwab G; all the evils that have fallen on the victim are bidden to fall on the head of אִסְכָּרָא בֵּר אִסְכָּרָא. But examination of the name reveals that it is fictitious; אִסְכָּרָא means "spellbinder" and אִסְכָּא simply means "mother." The writer of the bowl has satisfied his client by assuming that he knows the adverse sorcerer's name. It is nothing else than the legal "John Doe." In like manner, in Wohlstein 2416, all evil works, etc., are commanded to return against their instigator.

But inasmuch as the sorcerer's names are not generally known, the incantations content themselves with listing the various kinds of magical practices and putting them under the potent spell. The Šurpu-series illustrates the prophylactic practice; for instance, its third tablet⁵³ is concerned with breaking every possible kind of ban (mamīt) that may have befallen a person. Hence a recurring phrase in the praxis of the fifth tablet: "may the curse, the ban, the pain, the misery, the sickness, the grief, the sin, the misdeed, the impiety, the transgression, the sickness, which is in my body, be peeled off like this onion." We mark here the union of curses, etc. with evils of the flesh, just as they occur in our bowls.

Accordingly we find exorcism effected with this prudent intention against מעברין, etc.;⁸⁸ חרשין (+ בישין),⁸⁹ "black arts," perhaps generally with the sense of poisoning, = φαρμακοποιία;⁹⁰ סחריא, "sorceries," 39: 4;⁹¹ קריתא, "invocations," (the singular קריה in 16: 10), the ἐπικατασκευαί or ἐπεὶ ληστικαί of maleficent magic,⁹² also termed the דק' בתקלא דק'. There are the various terms or kinds of curses, the mamīt of the Babylonian, the ὄρατοι of the Greek magic; the לוטתא, especially in Pognon's Mandaic bowls, where the authors of these bans are specified, e. g. no. 15: father, mother, prostitute, foetus, laborer, master who has defrauded him, brothers; also the frequent נידרי, maleficent "vows" and the חרסא, which is the Syriac Christian equivalent of ἀνάθεμα, perhaps also אלהי (Wohlstein, 2426: 5).⁹³ This listing of the bans and their originators has its abundant parallel in the Babylonian magic; e. g. the third tablet of the Šurpu-series, already cited, in which all possible kinds and origins of curse are listed in 165 lines: of father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, brother, sister, etc., posterity, infant.⁹⁴ The unborn child, naturally regarded as homeless and miserable, hence a malignant wraith, is classed in the Babylonian magic

⁸⁹ Cf. the Latin equivalents, nefaria sacra, maleficia, artes nefandae, maleae artes; see Abt, Die Apologie des Apuleius, 30.

⁹⁰ So in the Syriac, also in 7: 13. But φάρμακον survived in a good sense in literature with magical tinge, e. g. in no. 30 of Bishop Serapion's prayers, "Thy name be a φ. for health and soundness." For an extensive discussion of the word, see Abt, Apuleius, 112. It is formally impossible to distinguish between the words "sorcerers" and "sorceries," except in the Mandaic. Cf. the use of the adjective חוראשא, 39: 6.

⁹¹ For these words see the convenient summary in T. W. Davies, Magic, Divination and Demonology among the Hebrews and their Neighbors, 44 ff.

⁹² See above, § 11. Pognon was the first correctly to interpret this term, B, p. 19.

⁹³ In 2: 6 we find אחרמותא, שמוחא, גוריתא, used of the "white magician's" own work.

⁹⁴ A similar list in Ellis 3 = Schwab B. In the later magic these classes are listed in exorcism of the evil eye.

as in the Mandaic citation with the causes of ban, and so too the hierodule or prostitute.³⁰⁰ The difference between the Babylonian mamit and these לוֹחָא is that the former has rather the sense of taboo, the latter of a malicious curse effected under foul auspices.³⁰¹

Then there are the "names," e. g. 16: 8, שׁוּמַחָא, of hostile invocations,³⁰² and the מִלִּין, "words," curse formulas, including the informal imprecation. Compare "the evil word" of the witch in Babylonian magic,³⁰³ and the current Babylonian phrase, "the evil mouth, the evil tongue, the evil lip."³⁰⁴ The Talmud has the principle, "None open his mouth to Satan."³⁰⁵ By a natural passage of thought the tongue and the mouth come in for exorcism, e. g.: "Bound and held be the mouth, and bound the tongue, of curses. . . . Bound be the tongue in its mouth, held be its lips, shaken . . . the teeth and stopped the ears of curses and invocations."³⁰⁶ The binding of the tongue is a frequent element in the Greek magic; some thirty of the κατάδεσμοι in Wünsch's Appendix of defixiones to the Corpus Inscript. Attic. are for binding this "unruly member."³⁰⁷

Further objects of exorcism are the רִי, "mysteries," the sacramental rites of maleficent cults; the אַכְמַרְתָּא (Stübe, l. 2) and כְּמַרִּי (Wohlstein, 2426: 5), enchantments effected by priests (כּוֹשְׁרִין).³⁰⁸ A unique word in its use in the bowls is אִשְׁלֵמָא, found coupled with the above terms. Halévy and Wohlstein³⁰⁹ compared form IV of the Arabic verb and rendered it as a delivery to evil. But it is to be compared with the Targumic אִשְׁלֵמוּ, used

More obscure are the סְתוּרָה (Ellis 3: 10) = "hidden arts" —with which may be possibly compared the שְׁדוּתָה of Schwab R, and Wohlstein. 2426: 6.¹¹ Also the שִׁקּוּפָה (once אִשְׁתָּקוּפָה) have aroused question. Schwab proposed שָׁקָה, "envisager," of the evil eye; Stübe, Wohlstein, Lidzbarski, connect with the root "to knock" (cf. שָׁקָה used of a Lilith, 11: 6).¹² This meaning is corroborated by the amulet of Lidzbarski's just cited, where it is parallel to חֲרָבָה and קִרְיָה (l. 11 ff +), wasting and mishap. But from its peculiar intensive form I think the word must have some connection with magic arts; cf. the modern spiritualistic knockings and rappings.

³¹ Dieterich, Abraxas, 136. Stübe (p. 37) first offered the explanation given above. Pognon discusses an obscure phrase in his bowls חֲסִידֵי וְשִׁלְמִתָּאן (E, p. 94), translating "and their adherents." Lidzbarski treating the same phrase (Eph. i, 49) rightly takes exception to such a form and translates, "I deliver them," which is unsatisfactory. Probably our noun is to be understood here, reading the nominal suffix —ן for the verbal וִינֵן—. Our word may be a translation of the Greek τελεσθη; but n. b. ²²⁵ Nöldeke, Z. f. Keils.-forsch., ii, 299, animadverting upon Hyernat holds that אִיטְרָא, translated "prince, angel," always means "charm." Now the parallelism in Wöhlstein 2422 between חַנְּוִישָׁא דְּבִיתָא אִיטְרָא, l. 7, and מְלָכִי דְּבִ' l. 15 (see above, n. 70), appears to approve Hyernat, while in the Talmud מ' = "genius, angel" (e.g. חַנְּוִישָׁא, 'angel of nourishment'). But Nöldeke's etymology is doubtless right; a genius to be invoked was himself called an incantamentum. A proof of this is found in the Mandaeic amulet published by Lidzbarski in the Florilegium dedicated to de Vogüé, p. 349, in l. 29 f. (not understood by the editor—cf. l. 210), where Hibēl Ziwa is the נְבִיחָא דְּחִיטְרָא, "the True Charm"; ג' = אִיטְרָא = קִיטְרָא. Cf. the Mandaic genius "Great Mystery."

¹¹⁴ So in a Babylonian text, of demons: "The man they strike, the women they hit." Fossey, op. cit., 282.

"vows," with which compare the אשעם ביש in his text M 18, is exercised against practices which magically placed "sin" on the shoulders of some innocent person. Compare the symbol in Zecharia's vision of the removal of wickedness and its curse to the land of Shinar (Zech. 5). But there is doubtless a reminiscence here of the old Babylonian forms in which a sense of personal guilt appears in the incantations; so frequently in tablets 5 and 6 of the Šurpu-series, e. g. 5, l. 77 ff., where the summary is made of "the curse, the ban, the pain, the misery, the sickness, the ailment, the sin (arni), the misdeed (šerti), the offence (hablati), the transgression (hiṭiti).²²⁵ The above would be the only case then of a sense of sin in our texts, but from the point of view that the sin has been inspired by a demonic force. Heitmüller pertinently remarks:²²⁶ "Die Sünde ist ein Art Besessenheit." And so sins are listed in the Greek objects of exorcism, e. g. πνεύματα χερσίων, ἀμαρτίαι, βουεποι, ῥεκαί, βασανίαι.²²⁷

The malice (סנאתה = סנאתה) of Lidz. 4 is the enmity which magic could conjure up against an enemy, a dreaded means of revenge, and very frequent in ancient magic. Compare the Jewish charms from Mossoul having this specific object,²²⁸ and for the Greek world the Cypriote leaden tablets published by Miss L. MacDonald,²²⁹ in which the gods are constantly invoked to suppress the wrath and anger and power and might of the adversary.²³⁰ A tablet to provoke such malice against an enemy is no. 2 in Wünsch's small collection.²³¹ The חיל בישן or חיל ביש (30: 4) is a summing up or personification of all this kind of evil potency.

Particularly dreaded were the material means of sorcery, amulets, etc., which themselves came to be personified into evil spirits. The most frequent of these objects of exorcism are the חומרי (sing. חומר),²³² small stones, beads, etc., carried singly, or on strings and necklaces, primarily used as amulets, but coming to possess at least in the Mandaic superstition a baneful influence.¹²² We might think of the manipulation of, for instance, an opal to bring another ill-luck; but probably the objects are more obscene, joints of dead men's bones, etc. Their standing epithet is "impious,"—ח' ויריאתה, and we read of their "tongue," e. g. 2: 7.¹²³ The ענקתא, "necklace charms" are exorcised in like manner,¹²⁴ also the שבינ (15: 6, q. v.);¹²⁵ כפסא, "pebble," Ellis 3: 11, would belong to the same class, but it is probably to be read כוסא.

The magic bowls themselves are among the evil influences (7: 13, perhaps Ellis l. c.), and so the magic knots, קיטרי, 7: 13, and עיקרי (?) 34: 10. There is one reference to the magic circle of the doctors of sorcery, חואר רבאני,¹²⁶ and to the use of wax, קירא, both in 39: 7 (q. v.). The כרני of 7: 11 (q. v.) and the גרנלי of Pognon B, no. 27, may be explained like חואר = circles. The זיפי of 7: 13 (q. v.), entered between the "arts" and "bowl," may be the hairs of the victim as used in magic.

¹²² The museums of antiquities possess many such necklace charms, which are often composed of stones of the shape of a drop or an eye—prophylactic against the evil eye? See for example, the illustrations to the art. "Amuletum" in Daremberg and Saglio, Dictionnaire des antiquités grec. et rom.; Elworthy, The Evil Eye, fig. 21. For the use of stones in Babylonian magic, see the 3d tablet of the Labartu-series and Myhrman's note thereon, ZA, xvi, 151; cf. Jastrow, op. cit., i, 338, and Thompson, Semitic Magic, p. lxiii. In Syriac חומרא is also used of the joints of the vertebra = the sappu of the ass as prescribed in the Labartu texts. With this cf. the prescription of parvum asini freni anulum in digito portandum, Cyranides ii, 15, 6, ed. Mély and Ruelle, Les lapidaires grecs, Paris, 1898, quoted by Tambornino, De ant. daemonismo, 83. The mystical properties of stones in Egyptian lore is well known, and they were associated with the metals and planets; see Berthelot, Les origines d'alchimie, Paris, 1885, 47, 218 ff., etc. For the use of stones and bones as prophylactics against the evil eye, see Seligmann, Der böse Blick, ii, 24, 141 ff. For Hellenistic references and bibliography, see Abt, Apuleius, 115. Buxtorf and Levy, in their dictionaries, s. v., and Grünbaum, ZDMG, xxxi, 263, understand these charms as pearls or corals.

To that very malignant potency, the Evil Eye—Nature's endowment of sorcery—there is comparatively little reference in the bowls, although in the later magic of East and West it is often the chief, if not the sole object of exorcism.¹²⁷ The longest pertinent passage in the Nippur texts is 30: 3 f.: "the eye of man or woman,"¹²⁸ the eye of contumely, the eye that looks right into the heart." By the word ܠܡܢܐ Pognon, B, p. 41, thinks is meant one who casts the evil eye. Or from its idea of "beckoning" may it be connected with the malicious "putting forth of the finger," e. g. Is. 58: 9 and cf. possibly Code Hammurabi, § 123. Grünbaum is doubtless right in holding¹²⁹ that among the Jews the evil eye was of a different character from the western Jettatura, referring rather, as also in the Old Testament (cf. also Mt. 20: 15), to the moral powers of envy, hatred, and so forth; the evil eye is rationalized and moralized. Wellhausen also notes the connection of the evil eye and envy in early Arabian thought.¹³⁰

We come now to those objects of exorcism which to modern science and "common sense" appear as natural physical or psychical maladies, but which ancient thought regarded as actuated by demons, even to the extent that the malady in question was personified as an evil spirit. It is a question how far we have in this phenomenon the survival of ancient animism which peopled the universe with spirits good and evil, and how far in the fin de siècle magic of these bowls we have the result of a (poetical?) personification of evil which comes to be taken as real by the superstitious mind. The ancient demonology survives but it is reinforced by the hypostatizations and personifications of the play and fancy of the later mind, working sometimes in the field of a worse superstition, sometimes at the service of the free and philosophic imagination.¹³¹ In the Old Testament the Word, the Spirit of Yahwe, even his Sword (Am. 9: 4, cf. Gen. 3: 24), are personified; the evil spirit of Yahwe (1 Ki. 22) becomes in the end an evil spirit antagonistic to its origin; the sevenfold gift of the Spirit in Is. 11, 2, Greek text, issues in the Seven Spirits about the throne of God, Rev. 1: 4. And so the Chariot and the Wheels and the Beasts that accompany God's theophany came under the same treatment of mystical personification.¹²² It is a similar phenomenon that we find in the Testament of Solomon; the seven demons brought to book by Solomon give their names as "Deception, Strife, Battle," etc. or the thirty-six elements (στοιχεῖα) are hypostatized into moral essences;¹²³ and in the same manner the Church personified the Seven Deadly Sins, which the Protestant Spenser dramatized in his perfect poetry. For various psychological reasons there was an increasing multiplication of the evils against which exorcism might be practiced; not only specific demons, like Tiu the Babylonian fiend of headache, but diseases under other names, and social evils such as enemies, loss of property, shame, might be exorcised. Probably the more intelligent man regarded this as a rational substitution for the elder demonology, while to the superstitious it merely meant more demons. At all events in the later magic we find more of the hypostatization of natural ills—how seriously it is to be taken is not always certain, and their commonplace names are simply given, whereas the old Babylonian magic would name the demoniac germ of the malady. Hence in our lists of exorcised ills we have in addition to the actual devils, already catalogued, series of evils which are somewhat on the borderland of diabolology. The old exorcisms still are effective but the old demonology is not ample enough; a man wants to exorcise headache, while he may be skeptical as to the existence of Tiu. Probably too as the exorcist ("medicine man") was also the physician, and medicine was born out of magic rites, we may observe in the naming of the actual maladies an intrusion of the rational spirit.¹²⁴

In the Babylonian we find cases in the magical texts of the summarizing of specific maladies along with the demons. A long and interesting example is presented by Jastrow.³²⁵ The series is introduced by a list of physical ills—contortions, broken limbs, affection of liver, heart, gall-bladder, etc. Then follow the evil eye, curses, calumny, etc., and then certain named demons; the text is an interesting predecessor of our inscriptions except that it places the maladies first. Is this the consequence of a rationalistic tendency? In the texts published by Kùchler we find semi-magical prescriptions for diseases alone.

The New Testament gives a first-hand insight into the popular demonology of a representative portion of the oriental world at the beginning of our era. We find there devils of dumbness and deafness and blindness (Mt. 12: 22, Mk. 9: 17, etc.); one woman had "a spirit of infirmity," πνεῦμα ἀσθενείας, Lu. 13: 11; Simon's mother-in-law was seized with a great fever and Jesus rebuked the fever, ἐπετίμασεν τῷ πυρετῷ,³²⁷ even as in another case he rebuked the wind. And Jesus gave his disciples power "over unclean spirits to cast them out and heal every disease and every malady," Mt. 10.³²⁸

In the Egyptian magic there is the like identification of diseases with demons,³²⁹ and the Greek magical papyri are full of it. Cf. the title of a charm given by Wessely, φυλακτήριον σωματοφύλαξ πρὸς δαίμονας, πρὸς φαντάσματα, πρὸς πάσαν νόσον καὶ πᾶθος,³³⁰ So in the samples of Syriac charms published by Gollancz³³¹ we have the same summarization of "all manners of diseases" along with the demons, e. g. p. 79: Exorcised, etc. be "all demons, devils, phantoms, every practice, all temptations, unclean spirits, cruel dreams, dark demons, asakku, namtaru, etc., to the different parts of the body, head, throat, etc.; Myhrman ZA, xvi, 146.

apparitions; fear¹⁴² and trembling, terror and surprise, dread, anxiety, excessive weeping; fever-panic, tertian fever, all kinds of fever, febrile ills, inflammations, etc.; when a child troubles its mother with pains of travail;¹⁴³ tumors, pestilences, . . . all pains and all sicknesses, all wounds and all oppositions, surprises, revenges . . . the nine sicknesses," etc. And Vassiliev has published a number of Byzantine charms directed especially against specific diseases,¹⁴⁴ the first of which is a general panacea: ἁρκίζω ἐμᾶς πάντα τὰ ἀκάθαρα πνεύματα, ἢ βασκανία, ἢ φαρμακεία, ἢ φοβερύσεις, ἢ φρένη, ἢ πυρετοὺς, ἢ ἐπιβουλήν, ἢ συνάντημα¹⁴⁵ πονηρῶν, ἢ νοσερῶν, ἢ κωφὸν, ἢ τυφλὸν, ἢ ἄλαλον, ἢ σκληρυακὸν, ἢ μηθεις (sic) θάνατον, ἢ ἀλλοιοῦμενον, ἢ μορφοῦμενον, ἢ ἄρσεν, ἢ θῆλυν, ἢ νοσημάτων (sic).¹⁴⁶

The most common of the demoniac categories bearing upon physical maladies are those with the general significance of "stroke, plague": ננענע especially epidemic disease, שוכטא, פנעי, and n. b. פנעית 16: 10; נחומא, Mand. מחיתא שיש (שוכ?) 34: 10, 39: 4;¹⁴⁷ also the חסכא, "sufferings."¹⁴⁸ Cf. Ps. 91: 5, a psalm and a verse which the Jews regarded as a valuable phylactery, and Ps. 89: 33. The שיקומא treated above may be included here, = רפואה.

It is a minority of the bowl inscriptions which refer to special diseases. Of our texts Nos. 11, 16, 24, 29, 34, are of this character; so also a clause in Lidzbarski 5; lists of diseases appear in Wohlstein 2422, apparently mostly cutaneous affections,¹⁴⁹ and at the end of Schwab G.

¹⁴² Fears are a frequent object of exorcism in the Greek magic, e. g. Wessely, xlii, 64, l. 25, and collation of the subject by Tambornino, De ant. daemonismo, 58, 65 f.; see also Dieterich, Abraxas, 86 f.

and then from כִּפְסָא, a menstruation malady (?); then are mentioned דְּבִרָא מְכַלְתָּא וּבִנְתָא which are evidently the causes of feminine irregularities, followed by טוּמִי, "pollutions" (fluxes?), and the בֵּר נִפְלָא, probably epilepsy. In a badly arranged series in No. 16 we find (l. 9) the רוּחַ נִרְיָ, literally "the spirit (= breath?) of stench and asthma," i. e. of the foul or labored breath symptomatic of diseases (see ad loc.). In 11: 3 f., again a charm for a woman, after the list of demons appear עֲקֶרְתָּא and חֲכִלְתָּא which we should translate "barrenness" and "bereavement," understanding them as personified.¹²⁶ But in the parallel Mandaic text of Lidzbarski's (see to No. 11) bereavement has become a Lilith (לִילִיתָא, חֲכַלְתָּא לִילִיתָא = ת' = takkâlîṭā). Which is the original of these forms? In 34: 10 אֲבַעְרֵן וְקִמְתָּא might be rendered, "ugliness and distortion," with which compare the charms of the Greek youths in the papyri for health, good looks, etc.¹²⁷

Another class of evils are those of a social nature. So poverty מִיִּסְכִּינוּתָא, figures in 34: 12, but from two other passages we see that it is the hostile witchcraft that would effect poverty in the victim's life which is exorcised: חִיפּוֹס אֲקִרִיתָא אֲקֶרְתָּא, 16: 10, and Lidz., 4: אֲקֶרְתָּא דְּמִי, where "distress" and "sickness" are epexegetical to "invocations." Again in 34: 12 is found an exorcism against all kinds of losses: יִנָּא וְיִנָּא in 7: 11 are troubles involving shame.¹²⁸

We mark that the rationalization of maladies had not gone very far; the decadent Babylonians were satisfied with the exorcism of devils and witchcraft and avoided the diagnosis of diseases. For modern magical practice in this field see the collection of Jewish charms published by R. C. Thompson, "Folklore of Mossoul," PSBA, 1906-7. In these the spirits have fled, but the ancient magical practices remain effective.

§ 13. PROPITIUS ANGELS, DEITIES, ETC.

In the Babylonian exorcistic system the beneficent gods and spirits were arrayed and invoked against the demons and ills that affected human kind. Jastrow gives a specimen of such an invocation of some twenty deities¹ and discusses at length these various lists and their orders.² In another example, given by Reisner,³ fifty great gods, seven gods of destiny, 300 Annunaki of heaven and 600 of earth, are invoked. It is not inevitable then that we must go to Persian dualism to discover the origin of the Jewish angelology. Absolute monotheism with its desire that the one God be exalted alone broke down before the specious and alluring argument that there must be more who are with us than those who are against us (2 Ki. 6: 16).

It is to be premised that in many of our texts the religious element is very deficient; reliance is placed upon bans and formulas with often no reference to Deity or other personal agencies of friendly character. Those inscriptions in which such supernatural agencies apart from God are invoked may be divided into three classes, representing so many distinct origins. There are those in which the well known names and name-formations of the Jewish angelology appear; although, as remarked above, § 12, the word "angel" is not used in all cases in the usual Jewish sense (often = deity). Then there are the genii of the Mandaic religion, mostly with names of outlandish formation. And finally there are the invocations of evidently pagan origin in which deities are named, although unfortunately most of their names are obscure or perverted by the text tradition. Further these different elements are confused and what appears like a good Jewish text at times admits a pagan deity into its celestial hierarchy—somewhat as the mediaeval Church came to canonize the Buddha.

(1) We need not dwell long upon the Mandaic genii. Pognon has given a survey of those occurring in his bowls,⁴ to which may be added a few more from Lidzbarski's and my texts. Some of the names are patterned after the Jewish angelic nomenclature, e. g. ערפעל (= רופאל), or have forms in -ai, e. g. בערדאי, ננחמאי, called "angels" (No. 38), or we find a name קאטריאויס patterned after the obscure Mandaic principles Piriawis and Sindiriawis. A number of the names are not found in the known Mandaic literature.⁵

(2) The angelology of the apparently Jewish texts and the angelic nomenclature are not as elaborate as we find in later Jewish literature, e. g. the *Sword of Moses*⁶ or the Sefer Rasiel,⁷ the bulk of which consists of lists of angelic names.⁸ The majority of our texts have no such names. The most common angels are Michael, Gabriel, Raphael. As a rule the names are formed in -el, although other formations appear and quite un-Jewish potencies are brought in as angels. Our texts stand on the borderland of Jewish angelology and not within its orthodox development.

Taking up first the known angels, we find that Michael does not have necessary precedence.⁹ He sometimes appears in the first place followed by Gabriel, Raphael, Nuriel, et al. (e. g. Nos. 14, 34, Hyv.), but as often the order has Gabriel first,—Gabriel, Michael, Raphael (Nos. 7, 20, Myhrman, Wohlstein 2422, 2416), or Gabriel occurs without Michael (e. g.

Nos. 10, 15).²⁰ The latter order is of course that of their appearance in the Jewish literature (Old Testament and Tobit). Other angels may precede these or occur without them. Aniel appears as the fourth in a tetrad (Wohlstein 2416).

The title peculiar to Michael in Jewish lore, the Great Prince, השר הגדול (Dan. 12, Aboda Z. 42b, etc.), appears in 5: 3, but without specific reference, and at the end of No. 7 in the list of angels, which in its occurrence at the beginning of the text names Gabriel first, Armasa is "the great lord"; so the application of the epithet is uncertain. In Hyvernat's text, which appears to be comparatively late, we find Michael's full glory expressed: "the mighty, the king, genius of the law" (גברא מלכא) (אשר מלכא), Raphael "reliever" (איסרא דאורייתא). In 34: 7 he is called the "healer" (אסיא), Raphael "reliever" (מורליא), and Gabriel the "servant of the Lord." the title "healer" suggests that the frequent opening invocation, "In thy name, O Lord of salvation (אסמא), great Saviour (אסיא) of love," which is not a regular Jewish form of address to Deity, may refer to Michael;²¹ but the supposition is not reinforced by the position Michael takes in these texts. In Wohlstein 2416 kabbalistic surnames are given to Gabriel and Michael, דמוחיה and אלפסס (so W. would read), the latter, "likeness of Yah," corresponding to the later Jewish notions concerning Michael as almost θεός ἐκτερος. Cf. the kabbalistic forms in 24: 4 (of angels?) and the group of seven barbarous names in Schwab M, Dalal, Salal, Malal, etc., presumably standing for the seven archangels.²² Reference to the latter is made once, in the introduction to Stübe's text (= Wohlstein 2416) where exor-

For Gabriel we may note that the Mandaeans gave him high honor, identifying him with Hibel-Ziwa (Norberg, Onom., 33; Brandt, Mand. Schr., 21), while they appear to have ignored Michael.

Cf. a form of charm in Wessely, xlii, 65, where the seven angels are named in one column, and parallel to them two rows of barbarous mystical names, the first column containing varying permutations of the seven vowels; e. g. אסמא אסיא אסמא אסיא אסמא אסיא אסמא אסיא. In this last series Metatron takes the place that should be given to Michael. Metatron¹³ appears earlier as one of the (six) archangels, in Targum Jer. to Dt. 34: 6: Michael, Gabriel, Metratron, Jophiel, Uriel, Yephephia. He is really a rival figure to Michael, springing from a different religious concept; Michael is an angel, the patron of Israel, hence the Angel, par excellence, the representative of deity.¹⁴ Metatron is in origin an idea, Platonic, Philonic, however we may call it, produced by the necessity of a Demiurge, a "second god" between Deity and man.¹⁵ It is interesting to watch the somewhat unlike histories of the rival ideas. Michael remains an angel, but Metatron becomes more and more a mystic being; he is associated with the Enoch and Elija legends, and his identity with these human beings may be described as an assimilation of them to Metatron or as his incarnation in them; he is both divine and human.¹⁶ To the mystic, the kabbalist, such a figure is more sympathetic than the archangel (cf. the argument of the Epistle to the Hebrews!), and so he replaces or absorbs Michael. Hence he is described in terms like those given to Michael. Eisenmenger quotes (p. 396) a long list of appellatives: he is Prince of the Presence, Prince of the Law, Prince of wisdom, Prince of kings, etc. (cf. the titles applied to Michael in Hyvernats's bowl), while elsewhere (Eisenmenger, ibid.) he is called the Prince of the world, cf. the title "the great prince" discussed above in connection with Michael.¹⁷ We may suppose that on the periphery of Judaism as well as in its esoteric circles the idea of Metatron would be especially acceptable to those who were not weaned from polytheism.

Comparing Nos. 3, 19, 25, we come upon an interesting identification. ארמסא, which appears in No. 3, is the Greek Hermes, more especially the Hermes of the mystic Egypto-Grecian theosophy (see to No. 3). He is the Word, etc. (No. 19) and in 25: 4 f., is identified with Metatron.¹⁹ Thus we have here a welding together of the esoteric Jewish Metatron and the equally mystical Hermes of Hellenism. Whether our magicians were aware what ארמסא meant, I know not and I doubt it. It gave them one more mystical name and combination.

Just as Hermes was dragged in, so other names or words were put in the category of angels or intermediate beings. So in 7: 8 the invocation is in the name of Gabriel, Michael, Rafael, Asiel, Hermes, Ablahu. Abraxas.²⁰ And so with many terms in these invocations it is impossible to decide what we are dealing with (e. g. Agrabis, 17: 4), whether a surrogate for a divine name, an intermediate being, a pagan deity, or perhaps a sorcerer's name. The expression "in the name of" was taken seriously only so far as the name was concerned; the name, the word, was the essential thing, not the prosaic object it stood for. The same phenomenon appears in the magical papyri. There we find now an exorcism in the name of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Jesus Christ (χρηστος) and Holy Spirit (αγιος πνευμα, sic)²¹—wherein the exorcist shows bad orthodoxy, whether as Jew or Christian; or again an incantation in the name of ιω θεου σαβαωθ θεου αδωναι θεου μιχαηλ θεου σουριηλ θεου γαβριηλ θεου ραφαηλ θεου αβρααμ, κ. τ. λ.,²² where gods, angels and formulas are mixed up just as unintelligently as in the incantations from Nippur.

As for the minor angels most of them can be found in other Jewish literature, and reference for them may be made to Schwab's dictionary of angelology. Glossary A lists the angelic names in the bowls. In their formation they follow the general rule of making the first (verbal) element express the object desired in the incantation. Thus in the love-charms Nos. 13 and 28, the angels invoked are Raḥmiel, Ḥabbiel and Ḥanniniel.

²⁰ For some of the angel names in the papyri, see Lucken, op. cit., 71.

(3) It is difficult to say how many of the bowls are Jewish; the presence of Jewish catchwords is not a sufficient criterion. I would call attention to a few of the Nippur bowls which are definitely pagan. Of such nature is the last one cited, No. 28, where along with the angel Raḥmiel appear the mighty (passionate?) Dlibat (a Semitic Venus) and [blank] gods. No. 19 has the longest list of invocations of apparently heathen deities. Only a few of them can be certainly identified. Hermes appears there, probably two words (masc. and fem.) representing the Gnostic Aeons (אֵיִלֹּה, אֵיִלֹּה); Bagdana, "with 70 exalted priests," who appears as a demon (Abugdana) in the Mandaic bowls.²² Other names have a very non-Semitic sound, and we can identify some Greek divinities: Zeus, Okeanos, Protogenos (see the commentary). Also we find angelic names, Akzariel, etc., and again Abraxas, and reference to the 60 gods and 80 goddesses. Yet the opening invocation is "in thy name Lord of Salvation," etc., who is also the "true God," l. 17.

Of peculiar interest is No. 36, in which the exorcist declares he has been empowered by certain deities: "The lord Sameš (sun) has charged me, Sina (moon) has sent me, Bel has commanded me, Nannai has said to me [blank], and Nirig (Nergal) has given me power." In quite antique wise the sorcerer (perhaps a priest, כֹּהֵן) professes to have received oracles. Apart from the striking parallels of the prophetic commissions in the Old Testament, we find the expression of like assumption by the exorcists in the Babylonian magic. Thus from the Utukku-series: "The sorcerer-priest that makes clear the ordinances of Eridu am I; of Marduk sage magician, eldest son of Ea, herald am I, the exorciser of Eridu, most cunning in magic am I";²⁴ again: "The man of Ea am I, the messenger of Marduk am I, my spell is the spell of Ea, my incantation the incantation of Marduk."²⁵ Cf. also the Maḫlu-series: "The god and goddess have commissioned me, whom shall I send?, and, "I go on Marduk's command."²⁶ In our text we have doubtless one of the latest survivals of priestly exorcism in the old forms coming down from the āšipu priests of Babylonia; these forms doubtless were cherished long in the Harranian religion.

IV. HISTORICAL CONCLUSIONS

§ 14. AGE OF THE BOWLS

Very diverse views as to the antiquity of the bowls have been offered by students. It is unnecessary to consider the hypothesis of their pre-Christian origin.¹ Chwolson as an epigraphical expert submitted the texts he was acquainted with to a careful examination and believed he could assign them, by comparison of the scripts, to different centuries early in this era, from the second to the fourth or fifth. But epigraphical evidence in the case of a formed script like that of the square character is fallacious. Especially in the case of rude popular texts, in which antique forms of writing have survived, no certainty from epigraphy can be obtained. And in general a chronology obtained from epigraphy is most dubious; I may refer to the current opposing arguments over the Siloam inscription and the Gezer calendar tablet, or note the remarkably fluent, almost cursive script of the potsherds from Samaria, which only their certain provenance compels us to ascribe to the Omride age.

But most of the students would be inclined to place the bowls considerably later, between the fifth and ninth centuries, although rather by conjecture, from the impression made by the contents, than through positive proofs. Levy and Halévy thought, but fallaciously, that they could detect Arabisms, and were inclined to date the texts after the Arabic conquest.² Nöldeke would place Hyvernath's bowl not earlier than the eighth century, basing his opinion on the forms of the Persian names.³ Schwab assigned his Louvre bowls to the fourth or fifth century.⁴

⁴ Rev. d'ass. et d'arch., ii, 136.

It is evident that, in the case of a large number of texts coming from different localities and in most cases not observed in situ, it is impossible to take a datum from any one and so fix the chronology of the whole species. Magical literary forms are peculiarly persistent; we may think of the uncertainty as to the age of the Greek magical texts, in which, for instance, a Christian theological phrase may not define the age of the magical formula. can only give a clue to that of the particular document. And so our texts, copied and recopied as precious magical prescriptions, repeated possibly by laymen long after the special school of sorcery had ceased to exist, may have extended over a series of centuries. Some bowls may be considerably later than others, e. g. Hyvernat's with its reference to "Ispandas-Dewa the Jinn of Solomon," and Schwab's H and O composed of biblical verses.

Fortunately more certainty as to a unity of time can be had for the texts from Nippur. These were found by expert scholars in situ at certain noted levels of the ruins. While written in three different dialects and as many scripts, nevertheless the appearance of the same persons and families in the three classes tends to show that they all belonged to about the same age. We are not therefore to suppose a stratification of Judaic, Syriac, Mandaic layers, representing so many different ages or even distinct racial elements. Nor do the variants within the texts of the square script compel us to assign them to different ages; these are but calligraphic variations. There is every reason to place the Nippur bowls within rather a brief period, and if one or a few texts threw any light upon the chronology, we could place the age of the whole collection.

The provenance of the bowls from Nippur was described in § 1; they lay above the stratum of the Parthian temple. This building had been destroyed, was covered with sand, and upon the Tell settled small Semitic communities, Jews and Mandaeans, drawn to the deserted place probably by motives of religious community life. Indeed we may suppose that these bodies, separated from the main currents of their larger societies, made a practical use and profit out of their religious prestige in the preparation of magical texts. To speak more exactly of the archaeological conditions, in the "Jewish" houses discovered by Peters an upper stratum contained Cufic coins of the seventh century, a lower stratum only Parthian coins, Jewish bowls being found also in the latter. The lowest dating then is the seventh century, on the basis of the Cufic coins, and this dating is to be pushed back, if it be modified at all, because of the ease with which small coins slip down through the soil. The archaeological evidence then for the terminus ad quem of our texts is the seventh century (probably its beginning), with a fair leeway back into the preceding century.

As I have said, the epigraphical evidence is a weak reed to lean on for chronology.⁵ The only new fact I can bring to bear on this feature of the discussion is the novel Syriac script exhibited in seven of our bowls. I have discussed this script in § 6 and there came to the conclusion that it is an early type of the Edessene style of alphabet, a result corroborated by its identity with the Manichaean alphabet. But again this may be a case of survival; certain evidence from epigraphy is nil.

There remains the philological testimony. The "Jewish" Aramaic of the texts is just such as we find in the Talmud, and with evidently like dialectical variations; a few forms appear representing the "Palestinian" dialect, remains of which occur in the Babylonian literature. The Mandaic dialect is fully formed, and has exercised its influence, at least in spelling, upon the other two, the Rabbinic and Syriac. There are many words which can be illustrated only from the neo-Syriac dialects, or from the compilations of the Syriac lexicographers. But these words may be old and only by chance have failed to make their appearance in literature. Thus the late Syriac form ܢܝܝ "goat," is now found in the Elephantine papyri. The fact that a Persian word, e. g. dastabira, does not appear till later or is a hapax legomenon, is not proof of late age unless it can be shown to be of late Persian formation. Nor do I find that any of the proper names compel us to assume a late date. The majority of them are Persian, and do not, to one who is a layman in this branch of science and who must rely mostly upon the authority of Justi's Namenbuch, appear to be necessarily late, say toward the end of the first millennium.⁶

⁶ Nöldeke's argument that the element -duch for -ducht speaks for a late age is not at all stringent for a Semitic dialect which would naturally abhor a termination in a double consonant; the Syriac texts have -ducht.

There is one line of negative evidence which is the only clue to a terminus ad quem which I can discover on this basis. Despite the variety of names, the list of which includes two Syriac Christian names (סעבריא, ליעשו) and a Greek name (Γεωργίου), also probable Indian names, there is none of Arabic origin. A pair of common nouns and the use of 𐤁 for the conjunction in two cases do give us etymological connections in that direction; but 𐤁 in this usage is found in the Senjirli inscriptions and the Elephantine papyri and is a spelling ad aurem—it is corrected in one of Schwab's texts. As for the two words 𐤒𐤍, Jinn, and 𐤒𐤍 (and possibly 𐤒𐤍), I cannot grant that these loans must have taken place after the Mohammedan conquest, when sorcery was so eager to include every possible name of evil spirits (n. b. the adoption of δαίμονες) and inasmuch as the good Semitic word may long have been at home on the Arabian frontiers of Babylonia.

My consequent conclusion is that the Nippur texts should be placed in a period not later than the sixth or the beginning of the seventh century, that is, only as a terminus ad quem, approximately 600 A. D. The abandonment of the Tell of Nippur may have been caused by the Arabic conquest, which, as we may assume, ultimately drove away the Jewish and Mandaean settlers to other abodes, the latter to their recesses in the south (they were not, I think, recognized as one of "the peoples of a book"), the former to the towns. As for those texts from other quarters that appear to be later, they are but the continuation, which we should expect, of the magic of the elder bowls, and as I have noticed in § 2, towards the end, late descendants of the species.

If my conclusions from the data of the Nippur bowls are justified, they afford us one result of comparative value. While the great mass of magical, and more particularly Jewish magical literature, is known to us only in late documents,—we may but speculate as to the age of the Sword of Moses, the Wisdom of the Chaldeans, the Seal of Solomon, the elements of Sefer Raziel—our texts are contemporary and authentic documents of the late pre-Islamic period in Babylonian history.

§ 15. ORIGINS AND RELATIONS OF THE BOWL MAGIC

"Jewish incantation bowls" is the title that has been generally applied to our species of magical texts. It arose in consequence of the fact that the first bowls interpreted, as also the majority of those now known, are written in the script and dialectic forms of the speech of the Talmud, and withal appear preponderantly to bear the earmarks of Judaism.¹ The subsequent discovery of similar supplies of texts Mandaic in composition and contents, and now the presentation in this volume of a number of Syriac texts, enlarge our vista concerning the diffusion of this special form of magic among the races and faiths of Babylonia. Further, over against texts of whose Judaism there may be no reasonable doubt, we find a number which are out and out pagan, while the majority are certainly eclectic in their theological tastes. These observations require that we extend our study beyond the domain of Judaism to discover the relations of these bowl-texts to the general field of magic, as we know it for the first centuries of the Christian era, and to the earlier strains which entered into it. What are the historical connections of our texts, and what light do they cast upon the religious or spiritistic thought of cosmopolitan Babylonia in the age of the Sassanian empire?²

In the magic-wild age at the beginning of our era, the Jewish magic was recognized as one of the three great schools of sorcery, along with the Chaldaean and the Egyptian. The Jews had inherited the rites and notions of primitive magic from the Arabian Hebrews and from ancient Canaan; despite the severity of an ethical monotheism, which throughout its growth had placed a unique ban upon the practice of sorcery, this feature nevertheless survived. While the Second Isaiah is deriding the sorceries of Babylon and exposing their helplessness (c. 47), we have stray glimpses of the persistence of ancient rites closely akin to magic, which still claimed the adherence of renegades (Eze. 8; Is. 65, 66). In the Book of Tobit are given magical remedies for the expulsion of foul demons with the concurrence of angels; Josephus tells of his sorcerer who could pull the demon out of the nose of the possessed with a root indicated by Solomon.⁵ The New Testament gives the first extensive and intimate picture of the magical conditions in Palestine; "If I through the finger of God cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out?"—inquires Jesus. In Acts we read of well-established sorcerers who bewitched the people and even Gentiles in foreign parts, a Simon Magus and Bar-Jesus Elymas. But apart from the hoary forms of Mezuzoth and Tephillin and some mortuary charms,⁶ our first literary specimens of Jewish or Judaizing magic are found in the Greek papyri of the Christian age, and there how much is Greek and how much Jewish we know not. Here appear various forms and anagrams of the Ineffable Name, quotations from the Scriptures, historical references to Solomon and especially to Moses,⁷ who came, as the great mystagogue and magician, to be identified with Hermes-Thoth, and was regarded as the teacher of Orpheus.⁸ He is made the author of a Hermetic book, through and through Egyptian and Hellenistic, entitled the Eighth Book of Moses, as a continuation of the Pentateuch, which Dieterich has published at the end of his Abraxas. Blau and Deissmann have published a delicate erotic charm, composed in true Greek spirit, and yet the former may be right in claiming its phraseology as preponderantly Jewish.⁹ In which direction was the give and take, what were the connecting links? Dieterich would find in the Essenes and Therapeutae the bond between Jewish and Hellenic magic.⁹ But just wherein lay the peculiar type and particular contribution of Judaism to the world's magical faith, we do not know, for the reason that we have no early magical documents of unimpeachable Jewish origin. And if we possessed documents from the Palestinian life of the Hebrews, how far even then could we decide what was specifically Hebrew and not Canaanitish or borrowed from the spheres of culture to the east and west? What different origins are assigned by the commentators to the occult practices described in Eze. 8.¹⁰

² The analogies have been set forth in the preceding sections; in the following paragraphs I can only speculate on the genealogical relations. Cf. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, 261, n. 2.

When we pass to the eastern home of the Diaspora we have that marvellous encyclopaedia, the Talmud, with its glimpses into the common life of the people as well as into the discussions of the schools; magic holds its sway more or less over all, and its existence, if not its legality, is confessed by the spiritual masters, who, if we may contrast successively Mishna, Gemara, the Gaonic period, with one another, came more and more to recognize and legitimize the practice of magic.¹¹ We catch in the Talmud and the subsequent authoritative literature some of the magical phrases, learn something of the practices and beliefs in demons, mark the superstitious fears of the people of Babylonia, of the Jews as well as of their neighbors.¹² Our bowls and their inscriptions are rude and unlovely, with none of the sombre dignity of the Babylonian incantations, or of the often lyric beauty of the Greek magical literature;¹³ but these bowls are of prime interest as giving us for the first time extensive texts of the eclectic Babylonian magic of the first Christian millennium. They are degenerate successors of the elder incantations of the land, yet they are autograph evidence of the superstitions which Talmud, with caution, and Eisenmenger's Entdecktes Judenthum, with malice, reveal, and are precursors of that sea of magical literature which has come down to us under Jewish auspices.

And withal they give a sample of the medley and fusion of peoples and religions in the land which the Jews had long since called Confusion.

The order of the day is to Babylonize, and our evident line of primary investigation is to discover the relationships of the bowls with the ancient Babylonian magic, the literature of which in the last decades has been published in large quantities by the most distinguished Assyriologists.* My notes to the texts and the Introduction show how apparently numerous are the connections between the object of our study and the magic of Babylonia. While there is only one instance of the specific bowl praxis in that earlier literature," still its method of defixion is quite congruous with the ancient magical operations. As of yore, the sorcerer appears as the commissioner of Deity or of the gods (§ 9); he follows definite and repetitious formulas, similar to the Babylonian šiptu (§ 11). He invokes most frequently, or at least primarily, one chief god, "the Lord of love and healing," just as the Babylonian called on Ea or Marduk, but, as in the elder incantations, other gods or their angelic equivalents are invoked in large accumulation (§ 13). Most striking in the correspondences is the registration of the devils, black arts and maladies to be exorcised; as in the Babylonian, so in our magic these are specified in long detailed lists (§ 12). In fact our spells far outdo the Babylonian repetition of the seven classes of evil spirits. In the Mandaic texts the terror of the witches appears, in others the evil charm is reversed upon the head of the sorcerer, all as in Babylonian magic. Rites and words and the instruments of magic, which are personified, are as much the object of detestation as in the Maḥlur-series. Diseases and all human ills are inspired by devils, indeed are devils and are treated as personal essences. The magician's ban, the spell of the mighty god, is laid upon them all, and they are forthwith assumed to be "bound," and "tied," as in older days when simulacra sacramentally sealed the operation. Even the quotation of Scriptures and references to sacred legend have their parallels in the Babylonian incantations, which used the ancient myths as potent charms (§ 11). It is unnecessary to proceed further with the summary of general correspondences, but enough has been noticed to dispose our minds to the dictum of Zimmern:²⁶ "Diese (the incantation bowls) im Ausdruck oft überraschend an die alten babylonischen Beschwörungen erinnernden jüdischen Beschwörungstexte, bei denen unter den mit Namen angeführten bösen Dämonen auch Lilith häufig erscheint, liefern in ihrer Weise ebenfalls den Beweis für nachhaltige Einströmen babylonischer dämonologischer Vorstellungen in das Judentum."²⁷

Yet the implications that may be drawn from this judgment, even if not intended by the writer, are open to criticism. In the first place, as observed in the preceding sections, similar correspondences with the Greek magic are to be noted in almost every instance. This fact compels us to recognize the possibility of eclectic as well as of immediate Babylonian influence upon the Jewish magic. And then, secondly, marked differences exist between the fields, changes in the center of gravity, omissions, accretions. There still remains a large degree of substantial reason in the opinion earlier expressed by Nöldeke, surveying the material from a different point of view: "Die Verbindung mit altbabylonischen Aberglauben dürfte also ziemlich lose sein."²⁸ The study of magic is still in its beginnings, and students are too prone to find a genetic relation when we have to bear in mind that we are dealing with parallel workings of the human spirit operating in a universal and amazingly uniform field, while at the same time, particularly for the age when Hellenistic culture was dominant, we must give allowance for the interfusion of factors geographically most distant.

Of the old Babylonian names of demons, only two appear in our texts, the sedu and Lilith (with its male counterpart), but these, if originally Babylonian, in ancient times had pervaded the Semitic world. The utukki limnuti are the רוחין בישתא, "evil spirits," but these have their biblical precedent.²⁹ The Babylonian vocabulary has been suppressed by genuine Semitic words. The extensive praxis of the Babylonian has also almost disappeared; the inversion of the bowl, some rudely scrawled designs, and one or two magical prescriptions" are all that remain in our texts of the elder practice. The use of the bowl in a love-charm has its parallel only in the Hellenistic karadeqnos or defixio, likewise buried in the earth. The sorcerer invokes the names of ancient masters (as in the Greek magic again), he no longer is professionally independent like the āšipu priest; even laymen borrow and lay the spells. The mere "word" or "name" has replaced the practice; in the Babylonian magic the gods were prayed to for their assistance, and we often question whether we are dealing with magic or religion; here their or the angels' names are simply used, and these are sufficient to invoke their potency, without appeal to the heart or mind of a living deity. The use of a word like Abraxas illustrates the extreme consequence; if a deity can become a name, so a word can become a deity—numen nomen! The formula "in the name of" can be used before letters and phrases as well as before divine names. At first sight this name-magic appears more spiritual; it actually proves to be more absurdly mechanical, because it invokes a binding of the gods and heavenly powers by a cheap and easy formula without any of the "service" of the gods, with litany and priest, which the elder rites prescribed.

There is thus a change in the spirit of the magic. The old Babylonian was religious in his incantations; it is only in the so-called medical texts that we find the passage from the religious sphere to that of entirely mechanical operation, which may issue either in empirical science or in absolute magic. The sense of sin lay heavy upon the Babylonian devotee, he needed to dress in sackcloth and wallow in ashes, while the incantation required rites of purification and confession of sins in pathetic and ethical litanies.¹⁹ But any such religious element is entirely wanting in our texts, apart from the stereotyped introductory formula, "Lord of healing, Lord of love" and two obscure, probably traditional references to sin and guilt.²⁰ We have in a word a purely magical system, that is, one whose efficacy consists in doing or rather saying certain things without a prayer or lustration or confession.

¹⁹ See Nos. 12, 13.

²⁰ Cf. the "confessional" in the second tablet of the Surpu-series.

^{20a} See p. 86.

It may be further noticed that in the use of the Jewish Scriptures, which is very scanty, the passages of real religious import are not employed (§ 11). This is especially true of the Nippur texts, and often all that we have reminiscent of the Bible or of religion are the stereotyped Amens and Halleluias, common property of the magic of the age. Along with this unreligiousness of the magic goes a certain impression of impersonality throughout; there is a general lack of reference even to personal sorcerers; attention is paid to the operation of witchcraft, regarded itself as a potentiality, and the mechanical danger is met by mechanical means.

In these differentia from the old Babylonian magic we find much that is apparently or evidently Jewish, and again some factors that are not so categorically explained. We may think that the comparative absence of magic rite is due to Jewish influence, as also the large use of name-sorcery. The cultless condition of the Jews since A. D. 70 and the long previous term of six centuries in which the official cult was confined to one sanctuary, must have incapacitated the Jew for the rites of the magician. He dared not make simulacra, many practices were out of question because of their evidently heathen associations ("the ways of the Amorite"). But he had a holy book made up of sacred words, and a god unlike any of the pagans, who might not be seen, who once had spoken (Dt. 5), and who in lieu of images and many sanctuaries was revealed in his Names.²¹ And so holy words and names became the province of the Jewish sorcery. His religion, when it passed out of the naturalistic or the ethical sphere, found its outlet in logology, in Rabbinism with its logomachies, in magic and kabbalism with their manipulation of words and letters. Even the angels, which were imported as a kind of humanizing mythology into Jewish monotheism, came to be but plays on roots, invocations of the attributes or activities of deity, so that finally angel was merely synonymous with charm.²²

In these particulars the Jews may have contributed to the later Mesopotamian magic, as well as to that of the Hellenistic world. In our bowls we find Jewish families as the clients, and in the Nippur collection there is a frequent reference to the venerable Jewish master, Joshua b. Peraḥia, as a revealer of heaven's mysteries; but as he appears also in the

²² See § 12, n. 112.

Syriac bowls, which are probably of pagan origin, he may have already become a common traditional figure like Moses in the papyri. Nippur had been since the Exile a center of the Jews,²² and in Talmudic times it lay just east of the famous Rabbinic school at Sura, between which and Pumbeditha to the north of Babylon the spiritual life of Babylonian Judaism circulated.²³ But Nippur does not appear to have remained a Jewish seat of importance. It is mentioned but once in the Talmud,²⁴ and the settlement which the Pennsylvania expedition unearthed on the top of its ruins was, at least so far as the bowls testify, a mixed folk, among whom the identical magic flourished under Jewish, Mandaic, pagan forms. This interchange of magical property precludes us from specifically speaking of many texts as certainly Jewish, even while we recognize numerous Jewish elements. It is interesting to observe that the Mandaic texts are truer to the theology of the sect than many of the so-called Jewish bowls. The Jewish magic here in Nippur, as elsewhere, was eclectic. The religion of the Jew cannot admit that it itself is eclectic, and the self-consciousness of the intelligent orthodoxy in rejecting or at least minimizing magic as part of the Jewish system, approves itself when we study our specimens of magic; their science is as much cosmopolitan as native.

I pass now to another clue for the origins of the bowl-magic. I have discussed under No. 3 the frequent references to the genius Armasa, who is identified with Metatron and called the Word, and is none else than the Hermes of the Hermetic theosophy. No. 28 is a magical philtre for a lovesick wife, the terms of which find their closest correspondence in Greek charms; No. 19 names a number of deities, among whose obscure names we can identify Zeus and Okeanos, and perhaps the names of the Aeon-pair. There are other clues of connection with the Greek magic, discussed in the Introduction and the texts; I may refer especially to the identical pharaseology in the choice of a certain day out of a month and a year as auspicious for working the charm.²⁵ Such terms as Abraxas direct our thought to the great western world and the imposing magical fabric of Hellenism.²⁶ And this system directs us to Egypt.

I have spoken of the permutations made on the Sacred Name as typically Jewish. And yet there was another people which equally cultivated the mystery of ineffable names, a people older than the worshippers of Yahwe, the Egyptians.²⁷ The Jewish development in this regard was hardly independent of Egypt. However this may be, we find in the Greek magical texts the fusion of the two theosophies, the Jewish Ineffable Name, with all its vowel permutations, and like sacred titles, Sebaoth, Adonai, etc., mixed pell-mell with those of Egyptian origin. And further the accumulation of barbarous syllables, such as appear in our texts, has no known tradition behind it hailing from the Jewish and Babylonian theologies; it must be traced back to the Egyptian magical science.²⁸ This phenomenon ²⁵ See p. 55.

²⁸ In addition to the observations in § 11, see Budge, l. c.; Wiedemann, Religion of the Ancient Egyptians (1897), 268, quoting Synesius's words: the Egyptian "mumbled a few unintelligible syllables"; also his Magie u. Zauberei im alt. Ägypten (1905), 32. The Greek papyri are faithful repeaters of this Egyptian art.—Stübe, remarking on the kabbalistic use of letters (p. 54), thinks that here we have traces of the passage from the Talmud to the beginnings of the development of the Kabbala. But as of Egyptian origin or kinship, the use is not to be dated by the Kabbala. It existed on the periphery of Judaism long before it was taken up by the Jewish doctors. Indeed Chwolson (CIH, col. 115) denies any special relation of these texts to Talmudic ideas (against Lenormant, Essai, i, 212, who held that our magic was a product of the Babylonian academies). Wohlstein was the first to observe the eclectic character of our magic, ZA, viii, 316 f. In matter of fact hardly a trace of technical Kabbalism is to be found in them.

is continued and flourishes with abandonment in the Greek papyri, and there again this form of magical spell falls in with the Jewish currents.

This Egypto-Hellenistic magic is one of the prime sources of our texts, and the impression made upon me in my study is that they resemble much more this form of magic than that of ancient Babylonia. The beginnings of this invasion of western sorcery into Mesopotamia may have begun with Alexander's armies; there can be little doubt but that pervasive Hellenism soon domesticated its magic, as everything else Greek, wherever it settled. It doubtless was reinforced in its development on Babylonian soil by the Hellenistic Jewish magic that had grown into luxuriant life on the theosophic soil of Egypt and thence sent forth its waves of spiritual energy to all the homes of the dispersed race.

It is difficult in the field of magic to decide which is cause and which effect, for the spirit of magic produces like fruits spontaneously everywhere. Our bowl sorcery is connected doubtless by many lineal bonds with ancient Babylonia, but it shows as unmistakable links with the Hellenistic magic, to which the Jews contributed, and from which they received still more. The problem of these texts is the same that confronts us in speculation over the Greek magical papyri. Who wrote these? Egyptian, Jew, Greek, Christian, Gnostic, all contributed each one his magical names, mysterious formulas, bits of sacred history, each outbidding the other in the effort to attain the same ends and arriving at an indistinguishable limbo of monotonous sameness. The texts were written for all who would use them, and those who received their magical traditions adapted them to the changing fancies of age and clime.

Our texts exhibit a like eclecticism. Babylonian, Jewish, Mandaic, Gnostic, Hellenistic, and indirectly Egyptian, elements are there, in various combinations. The Jew contributed a certain quality of monotheism and made it palatable by his angelology; his Divine Name, his Scriptures and apocrypha and liturgy, were storehouses of magical lore. All this was fused with like elements from parallel sources, and the product was useful to any body of magicians, even as it was in demand on the part of every class of clients, pagans, Persians, Jews, Christians, every kind of sect. And what is true of our texts is true of all the Jewish magical literature.

The bowls then are not so much illustrative of a special Jewish magic as of the eclectic religious conditions of later Mesopotamia; here the ancient magic, divorced from its content of real religion, came to be reinforced by new currents of superstition from the West. Whatever be the relation of magic and religion, whether they are twin sisters, or the one the parent of the other, or innate rivals, in our special and confined field we may observe the break-down of the ancient noble religions; gods have become names, rites esoteric and selfish and malignant, holy writings formulas. It is not Judaism we have been studying but a phase of fin de siècle superstition.

In recent years so much has been made of Persian origins for western religion, philosophy, and magic,²⁰ that I am surprised to find hardly a trace even in a word²¹ of the Zoroastrian system upon our bowl-magic. This is the more remarkable as it belongs to Persian soil and flourished under the Sassanian empire, while the dualism, demonology and magical practice of Persia would have been so natural a nursing mother to the superstition we have been studying. Had the Zoroastrian influence spent itself and, after it had given itself to the world, did the more virile currents of the original stock and of the West reassert themselves and triumph in Iran's territory? Or has the influence of Persia been overrated?

As to the comparative age, in point of literary tradition, of the three classes, "Jewish," Syriac, Mandaic, it is impossible to decide; all follow common types. In the case of the Mandaic replica to No. 11, the former has the secondary text. The Mandaic charms are closest in spirit to the old Babylonian magical literature, those in the Syriac appear to be expressive of the current paganism (c. g. No. 36).

²⁰ See Cumont, The Oriental Religions in Roman Paganism, esp. nn. 37-39, p. 266 f.; Bousset, Die Ursprünge der Gnosis, etc.

²¹ N. B. the Ispandas-dewa in Hyvernât's text, and פִּירִיכָה, possibly the Persian Peri. The arguments for Persian influences advanced by Levy, ZDMG, ix, 471 f., are now antiquated by the Babylonian literature. The fashion of interminable lists of demons may come from Persia.

COMMENTARY

A phylactery in the name of a man and wife for protection against the liliths and their broods which haunt the home. The same couple are the subjects of the charm in No. 13, in which the woman invokes the love of her husband and the blessing of children. For the general magical details I refer in this and the following texts to the Introduction.

1. אפרה: in No. 13 written with both ה- and א-. The name may be Jewish or Persian, (1) hypocoristic from אפרים, or (2) a hypocoristic reduction from one of the numerous names in Fra—; see Justi, Iranisches Namenbuch, 101 ff.; for the prothetic vowel, cf. ibid. 6. The Persian name of the mother by no means determines the race of the family.

שברוך = "Sapor's-daughter" not instanced in Justi; duch for ducht; see above, p. 104, n. 6.

2. תיהי = תהי, l. 4; both forms in the Rabbinic.

3. ועם ו : unless a scribal error, a unique adverbial development of the preposition, "and withal," = simul ac; or ἐπεὶ καὶ kal, e. g. Dieterich, Abraxas, 147.

4. בהמנודך: see Justi, p. 374 f.; also in Pognon B.

סמאי: in No. 13 also סמאי. A frequent Jewish name; see Heilpren, Seder ha-Doroth (Seder ha-Doroth), ed. Maskileison, Warsaw, 1883, ii, 296 f. The two forms are hypocoristic; see Nöldeke, art. "Names," Enc. Bib.

6. לִּילִית: pl., also לִּילִיתָא. The liliths are the only named objects of exorcism, but masc. pppls., etc. are found in 1. ro ff., probably by technical phraseology.

 ברתחון: the pronominal suffix expressed with the intrusion of ה;
 cf. in the Assouan papyri of Sayce and Cowley, ברלי (F, 9).

9. "Sons of light": נֹרָא is primarily fire and the term would indicate the angels, expressive of the legend that the angels emanate like sparks (cf. בני רשף, Job 5: 7) from the dinûr, the stream of fire under God's throne, Hag. 14a, and other reff. in Eisenmenger, ii, 371 ff. Cf. "the hosts of fire in the sphere," 8: 13. In 16: 7 the demons are "sons of darkness." But as the reference is to demoniac unions with human flesh, the expression appears to be transferred to mankind. It is then parallel to "sons of light," a name given in the Mandaic religion to the Uthras, Brandt, Mand. Rel., 30, and also to men predestined to life, Brandt, Mand. Schr., 13, 19. The redeemed come to share in the light-nature of the angels, cf. Dan. 12: 3, Enoch 38-39, cf. the אֱלֹהִים הַלְלוּ of the NT. In the myth of Adam Kadmon, man was originally a being of light (Bousset, Hauptprobleme d. Gnosis, 202, etc.; for the Kabbala, Karppe, Zohar, 372 ff.). Hence we must suppose that נֹרָא has been reduced from "light" (cf. the Arabic), and the expression is to be correspondingly rendered. The predicates following recall the myth of Gen. 6.

Talmudic formula against witch, generally translated: "Your head be balder, your crumbs [with which you conjure—cf. the anecdote of Abaye in Hull. 105b, Joel, Der Aberglaube, i, 69] be blown away, your spices fly off, the wind carry away the fresh saffron." I doubt if so much sense can be made out of the doggerel; following the Talmudic tradition our phrase would mean "your breadcrumbs away with the gust!" By itself the words could simply mean, "be blown away with a gust," with reduplication of the verb. For קרה in the Talmudic passage, see to 18: 9.

The combination in the middle of the line is obscure; a verbal middle noun from רשם? The participles מַחְבִּלִין וְנִי portray the fiendish assaults of the demons; the same accumulations in Līdzbarski's Mandaic bowls. Cf. the action of the demon of epilepsy in Mk. 9: 14 ff.

11. For the ש see above p. 61.

מִיָּן: for the relaxing effects of disease cf. Ps. 22: 15, Eze. 7: 17.

בְּתֵרִיכֹן וּבְתֵרִיכֹן, a dittograph induced by the scribe turning over the bowl to write on the exterior and repeating the word. The י in the first form represents the šewā. The meaning is: stay banned where you are!

12. מִיָּרִין: metaplastic form of root אָרַר, found in the Targums, etc. (cf. Heb. מוֹסֵר).

מִיָּרִין: cf. Kidduš. 81a, אִידְמִי לִיה סָמֵן כְּאִתְחַתָּא. The climax of the description is the worst and most obscene of the plagues; the same phrase in Pogn. B, no. 27.

13. בָּטוּם: in Ellis 1: 8 טָטֵם appears in conjunction with the Tetragrammaton.

14. לִיכִי, עֲלִיכִי: the form is singular, and the phrase refers to the many names of a lilith (see §§ 11, 12 and No. 42).

With לִיִּיתָא it is difficult to determine whether the singular or plural is meant. For "lilith of whatsoever name," cf. 14: 6: demons whose names are mentioned and who are not mentioned. The same indefinite invocation in the Babylonian, e. g. Utukki-series (Thompson Evil Spirits of Babylon, i, 153): spirits "that have no name," presenting a blanket formula for names not known; cf. δαίμονες καὶ ἄν ὅτι ἄνομα ὄντων, Pradel, Griech. u. südital. Gebete, 22, l. 2.

15. אַל, a Hebrew reminiscence; in general cf. Ps. 20: 2 f.

¹ See Blau, Zauberwesen, 77. The connection of this Talmudic passage with Eze. 13: 17 ff. has not been observed by the commentators.

Again I come, I Pâbak bar Kûfithâi, in my own might, on my person polished armor of iron, my head of iron, my figure of pure fire. (2) I am clad with 'the garment of Armasa (Hermes), Dabya and the Word, and my strength is in him who created heaven and earth. I have come and I have smitten (3) the evil Fiends and the malignant Adversaries. I have said to them that if at all you sin against Abûnâ bar Geribîâ and against Ibbâ bar Zâwithâi, I will lay a spell upon you, the spell (4) of the Sea and the spell of the monster Leviathan. (I say) that if at all you sin against Abûnâ b. G., and against his wife and his sons, I will bend the bow against you (5) and stretch the bow-string at you.

Again, whereinsoever you sin against the house of Pâbak and against his property and all the people of his house, in my own right I Abûnâ bar Geribîâ—or against Ibbâ bar Zâwithâi—(6) will bring down upon you the curse and the proscription and the ban which fell upon Mount Hermon and upon the monster Leviathan and upon Sodom and upon Gomorrha. In order to subdue Devils (7) do I come, I Abûnâ b. G., and all evil Sacraments and the tongue of impious Charm-spirits; I have come and smitten the Demons and Devils and evil Tormentors, the Gods (Idol-spirits) and female Goddesses—standing in serried rows and encamped in camps.

COMMENTARY

A mutual charm of two sorcerers, each invoking his powers in turn in the other's behalf. An almost exact replica of the terms of the charm is found in the first part of No. 27. The two men named appear in No. 3, where Pabak's household is the subject of exorcism.

1. חוב: apparently a formal term of introduction; cf. 26: 3. It generally connects the several members of an incantation series. Cf. the "and" introducing the mortuary charm published by me in JAOS, 1911, 273. It may be correlative to חוב in l. 5.

פאבק: the Persian Pâpak, Justi, p. 241; cf. Arabic Bâbek, Greek παμβεκος. The name occurs in late Babylonian, Hilprecht and Clay, BE, ix, 68.

כופיתא: Syriac כופיתא is a water-flask with a small mouth. For the character of the name, cf. Hebrew בקבוק, Xolzas, Lu. 8: 39 = כחא "wine-pitcher," etc. For the hypocoristic termination in יא—, see to l. 4. It is parallel in meaning and form to בקבוקה Neh. 11: 17.

נצירתא = נצירתא, 27: 3. Comparing the Rabbinic נץ, "a shining spark," and "white earth, gypsum," and נהץ, "polish." I understand this word in the sense of "polished armor."

קומת דנורא = קומת דנורא, 27: 4; the parallel marks the gradual obscuration of magical formulas. Fire is the potent element against witches and demons, as the ancient means for destroying their arts. In Babylonia the fire-god Gibil was the chief god of exorcism in such magic, Tallquist, p. 25 ff.; for other examples in Semitic magic, see Thompson, Semitic Magic in Index. Iron, like the other metals, and excelling them, is a potent means against devils, Blau, p. 159; Thompson, in Index; in the Testament of Solomon is an anecdote of a devil afraid of iron (JQR, xi, 18); Josephus' exorcist used an iron ring. For the western world, see Pauly-Wissowa, Real-Encyc., i, 50.

2. דבא I supply from the parallel inscription. After it appear traces of לו, which letters are repeated to make the following word; a fault in the bowl required the rewriting of the characters.

אֲרַמְסָא לְבוּשָׁא לְבוּשָׁא דְאַרְמַסָּא: the garment of a potent being carried with it his powers. Compare the assertion by the magician in the charm noted to l. 1, in which he professes to be clad with the magical paraphernalia of Moses, Aaron, David, Solomon, etc., and see above, § 9. There is also to be recalled the magical garment of Marduk in the fourth of the Seven Tablets of Creation, while the magical robe which renders the wearer invisible is common property of folklore.

אֲרַמְסָא is found in the parallel bowl No. 27 (along with the rest of this phrase); in 19: 7; in 25: 4 [אַרְמַסָּא מִיְמַטְרוֹן]; in 11: 7 in the spelling אֲרַמְסָּא; and in 7: 8, אֲרַמְסָּא = Myhrman, l. 4, הֲרַמְסָּא. The forms give the clue; אֲרַמְסָּא is one of the Syriac spellings for the Greek Ἑρμῆς, e. g. Peshitto to Acts 14: 12; אֲרַמְסָּא also occurs in Syriac. אֲרַמְסָּא is then the Hermes about whom gathered the extensive mystical cults and literature towards the beginning of the Christian era to which is given the epithet Hermetic. Summary reference may be made here to Reitzenstein's illuminating study Poimandres (Leipzig, 1904), also to G. R. S. Mead, Thrice Holy Hermas, London and Benares, 1906. The Greek Hermes, the messenger of the gods, was identified with the Egyptian Thot, the divine agent of human illumination—in a word the Logos of the Egyptian religion. This mystical function of Hermes-Thot is evidenced, e. g., by a passage in Justin Martyr: εἰ γεγενῆσθαι ἐκ θεοῦ λέγομεν Λόγον θεοῦ, καὶ οὖν τοῦτο ἴστω ἡμῖν τοῖς τὸν Ἑρμῆν Λόγον τὸν παρὰ θεοῦ ἀγγελῶν λέγοντι (Apol. i, 22; Migne, Patrol. gr., vi, 57.).

This figure was also adopted in the syncretistic mysticism of the farther East, as the expressions cited from our bowls show. He is the word מַלְאָכָא (= מַלְאָכָא, 19: 7),¹ and the Metatron, that mysterious intermediate agency between God and his creation in Jewish Gnosticism (cf. § 13). But this Hermetic theology was not mediated to the Orient through Judaism, but through the Hermetic schools, which appear to have held out, into the twelfth century, in that obstinate center of paganism, Harran. Chwolson has collected the evidence for the survival in that region of the Greek religious philosophies,² and Reitzenstein has now trenchantly pointed out (p. 166 ff.) the essential Hermetic quality of this last remnant of the old pagan philosophy. The magic of the Euphrates valley has caught up probably from Harran the figure of Hermes and easily identified it with the Jewish Metratron, the biblical Enoch, etc.³ Hermes was the equivalent of the Babylonian Nebo, and a passage in the Mandaic Ginza throws light upon the expression, "clad with the clothing of Armasa"; in the Ginza we have a tradition that the angels invested Nebo with a dress of fire.⁴

The מַטְלֵא of our text is then a proper epithet of אַרְמַסָּא. What is meant by the preceding epithet רַבִּיָּא? It occurs in the parallel text, and also in Stübe's text, l. 5, thus: מִי־מַטְרֹן מַלְאכָה רַבִּיָּא. I suggest that רַבִּיָּא (רַבִּיָּא) means "who-is-in-Yah," an ancient mystical expression for the Logos; cf. the Johannine ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ τοῦ πατρὸς, and the description of the Son as "in the bosom of his Father," and, "I am in the Father and the Father in me." Compare also 7: 8, יְהוּ בִיְהוּ, and note.

3. מִרְיִי (cf. 4: 4), reminiscent of the biblical מִי קָטַב, for which see Joel, i, 100.

אַבְנָא: a name of two Amoras.

נְרִיבָא: "scabby"; cf. Gareb, 2 Sa. 23: 38, and the Palmyrene נְרִיבָא, de Vogüé, Syrie centrale, no. 141; also the Arabic Juraib, Jarbâ.

אַיבָא: the same name in Seder ha-Doroth, ii, 45. The form is shortened from Abba, see Lidzbarski, Ephemeris, ii, 8.

זוּיָא: so the probable reading of the name here and below. It is hypocoristic from זוּיָא, "corner"; cf. the biblical name Ribk̄a = Aram. רִבְקָא, "stall." Is there here a pious allusion to the daughters of Israel as polished corners (זוּיָא) of the temple, Ps. 144: 12?

אַשִׁיפָא: the verb is found in the Aramaic only in the Syriac, and but rarely, and in the bowls occurs only here.

Nouveaux documents pour l'étude de la religion des Harraniens, in the Actes of the 6th International Congress of Orientalists, II, 1, 281.

⁴ Ginza, R, p. 54, ed. Petermann; see Brandt, Mandäische Schriften, 89.

וְאִשְׁפָּא דִּיכְמָא וְי: the spell on the sea and Leviathan was mightiest in magical history, for it was the first great act of "white magic"; cf. the Marduk legend. A survival of this mystical aspect of creation appears in Job 38: 8-11, which concludes: "And He said: thus far shalt thou come and no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed"; cf. Jer. 5: 22, Ps. 104: 6 ff., Job 38: 8 ff. The subjection of the abyss is a frequent magical allusion in the papyri, e. g. the Great Magical Papyrus of Paris, l. 3062 ff. (Dieterich, Abraxas, 140; Blau, p. 113; Deissmann, Light, 258). The sealing of Tehôm is referred to in Targ. Jon. Ex. 28: 30.

4. חֲחֻמְתּוֹ: the scribe began to write the perfect, passed into the imperfect (which we should expect here) with the second letter and returned to the perfect termination; he amended his mistake by rewriting the word. In general the scribes aimed at carefulness. A word so corrected is sometimes deleted with a line.

אִיחְתָּמָא: for the various forms, see Glossary, s. v. אִיחְתָּמָא.

בְּבִיחָא: a Mandaic and also Targumic idiom for בְּנֹחֵי, Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 144.

וְיִכְבֵּשׁ בִּי: a form of כִּי found in Targums and Talmud (also in the Palestinian charm cited to l. 1). The terms are reminiscent of Marduk's slaying of Tiamat in the Babylonian creation legend: "Marduk made ready bows The bow and the quiver he hung at his side"; cf. the praise of Marduk's bow in the fifth tablet (King, Seven Tablets of Creation, ii, 63, 83, and fragment cited, p. 207); also numerous biblical parallels: Hab. 3: 9, cf. v. 11; Ps. 7: 12-14; Dt. 32: 41 (where Gressmann, Isr.-jüd. Eschatologie, 78, would read אִשְׁפָּא for אִשְׁפָּא). As in l. 1 with the clothing of Deity, so here with his magical arms the magician declares himself invested. But the phraseology may be based on magical practice, a symbolical shooting at simulacra, in the same way as these are burnt, peeled off, mutilated, etc. A very similar passage is to be found in one of the Manichaean texts discovered in Chinese Turkestan, in which the conjurer shoots with his bow and arrow at the demon, who falls dead; Sitzungsberichte of the Berlin Academy, 1908, 401.

נִיכְבֵּשׁ: participial form from נִכַּב; the Peal is unique.

5. תּוֹב: the other part of the mutual charm now begins. The contrast is further expressed by בִּידֵי, "on my part."

או באיבא: this name was omitted in its proper place and is now inserted.

6. אחרמא: for the prosthetic א see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 24.

על חרמון: a reminiscence of the myth of the confederation of the fallen angels upon Hermon (n. b. חרם √); see Enoch 6: 5 f.: "they named the mount Hermon, because they had sworn and bound themselves by curses upon it"; also 14: 7 ff. Philo of Byblus also connects the Titans with the Lebanons and other mountains of Syria: "These begat sons of greatest size and superiority, whose names were given to the mountains which they occupied, so that some of them are called Kassion and Libanos and Antilibanos and Brathu." And Hilary of Poitiers adds something to our knowledge of the myth: "Hermon is a mountain in Phoenicia, the interpretation of whose name is anathema. Moreover it is the tradition—from whose book it comes I know not,—that the angels lusting after the daughters of men, when they descended from heaven, assembled on this very high mountain." Cf. the anointing of Nebo by the evil gods in the Mandaic mythology, Brandt, Mand. Rel., 126 f.

7. סידרי סדרין: construct of accumulation.

רפרי מרפרי: "camping in camps." רפרי is very rare in Hebrew and Aramaic, but is frequent in Assyrian, where among several meanings it is found in this sense (cf. the biblical place-name רפירים). מרפרי occurs in a MS. cited by Rabinowicz to Megilla 10b: בית מרפירו של אדוני, where מ' = Hebrew. שכינה. The variant in 27: 11, מרפרי מרפרי, parallel to ס' סידרי ס', is probably the correct form. The allusion to the serried battalions of the demons is epical, perhaps of mythological origin.

TRANSLATION

In thy name, O Lord of salvations, the great Saviour of love.

Designated is this spell and mystery and strong seal for the sealing of the household of this (2) Ardôî bar Hormizdûch, that from him may depart and remove the evil Demon and the evil Satan, who is called SP'SK, the Mighty Destroyer, who kills (3) a man from the side of his wife and a woman from the side of her husband, and sons and daughters from their father and from their mother,—by day and by night omo, omo, walking. (4) I adjure thee that thou do not kill off this Ardôî b. H. from Aḥath his wife, and that thou do not kill off Aḥath bath Parkôî from Ardôî her husband, (5) and that thou do not kill off their sons and their daughters, whether those they have or those they shall have, from this day and forever, neither by night nor by day. In the name of Z'Z'Z', ḤSR, ḤSR, P'SP'SP', TMR, TMR, (6) TMR, NKT, ZHZHZH, ḤSR, P'S, TMR, KK, 'STW, YWPT, YWPTYH, from the burning fire, SKSYN, SYN, SYN, SKYWN; SK, his name KS his name. This is the great name before which the angel of death is afraid, (7) and when he hears it, frightened he flees and is swallowed up before it and (just so) before this Ardôî b. H. shall he fear and flee [and from] Aḥath his wife, bath P., and from all their sons and from (8) all their daughters, whether those they have or those they shall have. PWTSS, Amen. In the name of KK, 'STW, YWPT, YWPTYH, from the burning fire, SKSN, SKSYN, SKYWN, [This is] the great name before which the angel of death is afraid and when (9) he hears it, frightened he flees and is swallowed up before it and before this household. Moreover now in this great name of which is afraid [the angel of death, etc.—he shall flee from Ardôî b. H.] and from Aḥath his wife b. P., (10) and from sons and daughters, those they have and those they shall have. PWTSS, Amen. In the name of 'STW, YWPT, etc. [This is the great name] before which the angel of death is afraid, and when he hears it (11) frightened he flees and is swallowed up; so moreover now on the authority of this great name shall flee and flee and go forth the evil Demon (from Ardôî, etc.). PWTSS. According as it is said: "And YHWH said to Satan: YHWH rebuke thee, Satan; YHWH rebuke thee, who chooses Jerusalem. [Is not this a brand plucked from the burning? Amen. Amen.]"

COMMENTARY

A charm for a man and his family against a murderous spirit. The charm consists in magical syllables constituting "this great name" and the formula is repeated four times; see p. 65.

1. מרי: construct = Syr. מריא. מריא אסאחא ונ': a frequent epithet in these bowls of the deity invoked, along with רבא דרחמי, e. g. 7: 1. Cf. the frequent invocation in Pognon's bowls: אסאחא אסאחא דמאסא: אסאחא אסאחא, etc. The theme אסאחא is equivalent to salus in the New Testament and Latin salus, German Heil, for which modern English offers no synonym, the good old word "health" having been specialized. The word implies a remedy against evil spirits and black magic. It is also used concretely, of the phylactery, "this 'א", Wohls. 2426: 1.

The epithets here used are interesting as being probably one of the few survivals in these inscriptions of the ancient Babylonian theological terminology; there we have, in the penitential and magical literature innumerable appeals to the love and curative powers of the deities; thus Marduk is god of love and life,¹ Ea is a-si-e.² And the exact equivalent of אסאחא is found as an epithet of Gula, the consort of Ninib: azugallatu bēltu rabitu, "Great Healer, Mighty Mistress"; and of Bau, who became identified with Gula, e. g. asitu gallatu.⁴ Ninib was domiciled at Nippur and these epithets of his consort may have been particularly Nippurian, and so have survived in the bowls coming from that locality. I have not been able to discover the parallel masculine epithet for Ninib.³ This invocation is doubtless pagan, being distinct from the numerous biblical epithets expressive of the love and power of God. It is never associated with the Jewish Divine Name. Eurhp is a common epithet of the Greek gods, Zeus, Apollo, Asklepios, Hermes, and is an epithet of the Deity in the N. T., e. g. I Tim. 1: 1. Cf. also the Phoenician בעל מרפא, CIS, i, no. 379, and Ex. 15: 26, אני יהוה רפאך. Also n. b. the common epithets for

⁴ R. C. Thompson, PSBA, 1908, 63.

⁵ Radau (BE xvii, pt. 1, p. ix) endeavors to find the same title for Ninib in his explanation of the Aramaic rendering of נין-נ, אסאחא (see Clay, JAOS xxviii, 1907, 135, and Montgomery, ibid., xxix, 204). He interprets it as = en-usāti, "lord of help," our very title (cf. Delitzsch, Beiträge z. Ass. i, 219, for equivalence of AZU with āsu), and with the same root. The interpretation would be very agreeable to me in view of the above remarks, but Radau omits to explain the Aramaic rendering of s (or z) by ש when the Aramaic has the root אסא, while Clay's explanation appears to me the more satisfactory.

the love of God (רַחֵם) in the O. T. and Koran, also in the Palmyrene texts.* Pradel has collected in his Griech. u. südital. Gebete, 42 f., a number of the epithets denoting the healing and merciful character of God; he is there ιατρος ψυχων, ελεημων, etc.

מִזְמֵן: a standing introductory formula in these bowls (with כַּסָּא, etc.). זִמֵּן, Pael, appears to be used in the sense in which the Peshitto has it as the rendering of the Hebrew הִקְדִּישׁ, "sanctify," e. g. Josh. 7: 13, Jer. 12: 3. Cf. the religious connotation of the parallel root—יָדַע.

For חַתְמָתָא as a pa'al formation see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., 121. Cf. the Mandaic forms and formula cited by Lidzbarski, Eph. i, 96, n. 1: חַתְמָתָא וְחַתְמָתָא וְחַתְמָתָא. The "charm, mystery, seal," are identical, and refer to the Great Name of the incantation. For the identity of name and seal, see Heitmüller, "Im Namen Jesu," 143, 150, etc.

2. אֲרֻרִי: hypocoristicon in -di, abundant, with variants in -ai and i, in these texts (see Nöldeke, Persische Studien, in Sitzungsberichte, phil.-hist. Class, of the Vienna Academy, 1888, p. 387.). The name is formed from one of the numerous Persian names in ard- or art-; it occurs in Myhrman's text, see his note, p. 349.

חֻרְמִיּוּדִין: a frequent Persian name see Justi, p. 10.

יִיָּה, or יִיָּה = יִיע, from יוּע or יוּעַ; but as יִיָּה, from יוּחַ (found in Heb., Ex. 28: 28, cf. the Aramaic יוּחַ), see the forms יוּרְחֵן, 10: 6, יוּחֵן, 12: 10, אַתְּוֹחַ, Pognon, B. יִיָּה, 31: 3.

"Demon, Satan, Destroyer," all epithets of the one demon; cf. above pp. 58, 68.

צַפְעֵקֶס: with reversal of the alphabetic order of the first four letters—to indicate the bouleversement of the demon?

אֲבַדָּא: abbāda gabbārā, abbād not otherwise found; for the formation cf. Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., § 115. Notice that the Hebrew and Greek Abaddon is represented in Rev. by ὁ ἀπολλων, as though the original was a noun of agent, not an abstract. The epithet = חֲטִילֵּאךְ הַמְשַׁחֵת, 2 Sa. 24: 16, חֲטִילֵּאךְ, Ex. 12: 23, the Samaritan סַחְבֵּלָא, etc.

3. וִירְלָא: for the vocalization of the conjunction cf. וִירְלָא, 14: 6;

* Baethgen, Beiträge, 82 f., Lidzbarski, Handbuch, 153.

וילשהיב, 14: 7, etc. The conjunction is also similarly pointed in Targum Onkelos, Dt. 14: 37 (ed. Berliner), ויחלף; see Berliner's note, ii, 140.

אישיחן: the half-vowel after ט is indicated, as in Mandaic.

אוימו אומו מואלך: thus the uncanny stealthy movements of the demon are expressed.

4. אחתראבנה: probably the first element in such a name as אחתראבנה, "sister of her father," cf. אחרבו, "brother of his father," a frequent name in the Talmud. Cf. biblical אחאב, and the Babylonian Aḫatbu, Aḫatšuna, Aḫat-imnišu, etc. (Tallquist, Neubabylonisches Namenbuch, 3), and similar names in the Glossary.

פריכי: hypocoristic of Persian Farruchan, Justi, p. 94 ff.

5. רחן = hāwēn, cf. רחן, רחן, 6: 4. pl. ppl. with future sense, as common in Syriac.

דנן: appears only in this phrase, so 16: 13, 19: 20, is archaic and seldom in Talmud; for the pronouns see end of Glossary C.

6. "From the burning fire," i. e. of hell. For the threatening of demons with pangs of hellfire, see Pradel, 21, l. 11 ff.; for the threatening of demons in general cf. the Paris Magical Papyrus, l. 1227 ff. (ed. Wessely), and see in general Tambornino, De ant. daemonismo, 78.—The angel of death appears in Schw. F. The charm of which he is afraid is à potiori more fearful to the demon.

7. יעיריק: for the second י representing the šerwā, cf. the Sabbioneta text of Targum Onkelos, ed. Berliner, to Ex. 21: 13, Num. 35: 26. For u in ירחול, see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., 219. N. B. the two prepositional forms קראמויה and קרמיה along side of each other, the latter attributed to the "Palestinian" dialect by Dalman, Gram. d. jüd.-pal. Aramäisch, 181.

The Great Name, or True Name, at which devils and all things created tremble and flee away, is a common thesis in the Greek magic: Wessely, xlii,⁷ 65, ad infra: the God of Israel whom the heavens bless and (the oceans?) fear and every devil trembles; Dieterich, Abraxas, 140, l. 55 ff: the name at which trembles the Gehenna of fire and every mountain trembles; Wünsch, Antike Fluchtafeln, no. 4, l. 44 (with editor's notes), and no. 5.

l. 21. It is not necessarily a Jewish phrase, Wessely, xxxvi, 50, l. 244 ff: "This is the primitive (πρωτερον) name of Typhon at which trembles earth, deep, hell, heaven," etc. Cf. Heitmüller, pp. 148, 231, for citations from the Fathers, and Pradel, p. 40 f., for Greek magic. Dieterich regards this trembling before the Name as of Orphic origin, p. 141.

The bowl CBS 16093 is almost identical in text with this one, and bears the same design. It is about two-thirds as long. Its clients are the couple named in Nos. 32 and 35. Also another bowl (unnumbered) is practically the same as the present text, but shorter, with the same design. also made out for the clients of Nos. 32 and 35.

Covers to hold in sacred Angels and all evil Spirits and the tongue of impious Amulet-spirits. Now you are conquered, you are charmed; charmed, you are charmed and sealed in each one of the four (2) corners of his house. You shall not sin against Pābak bar Kūfithāi, nor shall any do folly against him, against all the people of his house, either by night nor (3) by day; because I have bound you with an evil charm and a sure [seal]. Again, I have charmed you with the charm with which Enoch was charmed by his wicked brothers. Again I charm you with an evil and galling seal. Again, (4) I charm you with the seal with which were charmed the Seven Stars and the Twelve Signs of the Zodiac unto the great day (5) of judgment, and to the great hour of the redemption of your heads: you shall not . . . , nor sin against them, against Abūnā bar Geribtā, and none shall at all do folly against them, namely the people of the household of Pābak (6) b. K., neither by night nor by day, because well sealed is his house and well armed, and with a great wall of bronze have I surrounded it. I, what I desire I grasp, and what I ask I take. (7) You are in the place of Abûnâ b. G. and in the place of Pâbak b. K.

COMMENTARY

A general charm against all evil spirits, made out for the Pâbak of No. 3. The introductory lines are of interest as they definitely settle the use of these bowls (§ 8). The design represents the sorcerer waving his bough, see p. 55.

1. מִיטְלֵי דְלִמְכַל : מִי is to be identified with the plural of the Syriac mēṭallēhā, mēṭallē, or mattēlē,² the י probably represents the pronunciation mattēlē. The second word מִיכַל is the infinitive of כֹּל, "contain," whose original meaning is retained in the Hebrew, even in the sense of holding in with force, e. g. Jer. 6: 11, over against the later meaning of "measure."

מִלְאֲכֵן קְרִישָׁן : See p. 79; also cf. חֹמְרִיא קְאִרִישָׁתָא, Ginza, ed. Petermann, p. 231, l. 10, and the Mandaic רֹחָא דְקֹרִישָׁא.

וִרְחִי : the first letter was written by inadvertence.

וִירְנִי וִירְנִיתָא : case of dittography.

אַהֲשָׁא : for the prosthetic א, cf. Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 32.

3. דְּאַסִּירִי בִיהּ וְנִי : we find here the idiom of the active use of the passive participle, as in Neo-Syriac; see Nöldeke, Gram. d. neusyrischen Sprache, §§ 103, 143. An approximate use of this participle in verbs meaning "to carry," etc., and also with אֲסַר is found in classical Syriac (Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., § 280). But in these instances the participle is middle voice in meaning; thus אֲסִירִי כְלִילָא means, "he bound himself with a crown." In the present case the participle has assumed a completely active sense, with an object other than the subject.

אַחְוֶן : this spelling is found in a passage from the lexicon of Karmasedinoi, quoted by Payne-Smith, col. 266, s. v. אֲחִיכְרִיסְטוֹס.

אַחִי : "his brother" and "his brothers" have the same spelling, differing as -āhi and -δhi; the forms in -āi, -δi are Mandaic, and also Palestinian.

There is reminiscence here of a cycle of personal legends concerning Enoch which have been preserved only in the Arabic, see Weil, Biblische

² See Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., § 59.

Legenden der Musselmänner, p. 62, a compilation from manuscript sources.² According to these legends Enoch (Idris), who foretold the flood, suffered at the hands of the wicked Cainites, even as Abraham was made a martyr for his faith. Our passage must refer to some spell laid upon Enoch by his adversaries. The early Samaritan theologian Marḳa (fourth century) cites a book of the Wars of Enoch, which may have contained these traditions.³ A spell laid by the wicked on a saint was à fortiori potent; see above, p. 64, for other apocryphal examples. For Enoch in incantations, cf. 19: 17.

ܝܘܡܐ ܪܒܐ, שעתא רבא: cf. "the great day," Hexaplaric Syriac to Is. i: 13, the New Testament "that day and that hour," the Syrian Ephrem's expression, "the hour of judgment" (ed. Lamy, iii, 583), and the Arabic "the hour." For the feminine form ܪܒܬܐ, see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., 145.

In lines 4, 5, we are introduced to an extensive and ancient cycle of myths concerning the relation of the Seven Stars (the planets with sun and moon) and the twelve zodiacal signs, with the creator of the kosmos. There were two distinct developments in this mythology; in the polytheistic development the planets became highest deities. But in what we may call the monotheistic trend of thought, in which one of the gods, like Marduk became monarch, or, as in Israel's faith Yahwe is the sole God, stress is laid upon the antithesis between the Creator-God and those celestial divinities. The present regulated orbits of the planets and the fixed positions of the zodiacal constellations signify that these beings, once autonomous, have been brought into subjection to a higher god. In process of time they came to be regarded as "spirits in prison." Thus Tiāmat became, when slain, the fixed firmament (or the zodiac?), while, according to Zimmern, KAT, 502, the eleven Helpers of Tiāmat are the twelve signs of the zodiac, minus that of the Bull, the sign of Marduk himself. This unfavorable attitude toward the celestial bodies is thus ancient. The monotheistic trend was native to the Hebrew theology, and in line with it we have the passage in Is. 24: 21 ff., according to which "the host of the height on high," as well as the kings of the earth are punished, being bound in prison. For the later theology the Book of Enoch is a good witness; e. g. 18: 13 ff.: "I saw there seven stars as great burning mountains. When I inquired about it, the angel said: This is the place where heaven and earth are at end; this is a prison for the stars and the host of heaven. The stars which revolve over the fires are they which at the beginning of their origin transgressed the command of God for they did not come forth at their time. Then he became angry at them, and bound them for 10,000 years, till the time when their sin is accomplished" (cf. 21: 6). The "spirits in prison" of 1 Pet. 3: 18 ff. is in line with the same notion, depending directly upon Is. 24: 21 ff., and we may compare the invidious use of "planets" in Jude 13, in the expression ἀστέρες πλανῆται.⁴

² For the later Jewish Enoch literature see Jew. Enc. i, 676.

But our text also bears witness to another development of the myth. The "binding" of the Seven Stars and the zodiacal signs was for a fixed term. According to the passage quoted from Enoch, it was for 10,000 years. In the Isaianic passage, a term is fixed: "after many days shall they be visited." In Peter the ancient myth is revived in the notion of Christ preaching to the spirits in prison. It is left somewhat obscure what shall take place when "they shall be visited," or when "their sin is accomplished" (with Enoch). Exegetes differ over יפקרו in Isaiah, whether the verb is to be understood favorably (of a visitation for release) or unfavorably (of chastisement). Also the Petrine preaching to the spirits in prison is understood by commentators in equally opposite ways. In our text the term of "the great day" and "the great hour" is evidently to be one of release to the stars bound in prison. There appears to be applied here the idea of a universal Apokatastasis. Now for this notion of the redemption of the imprisoned celestial deities we have a basis in Babylonian mythology. In Tablet vii, l. 27 f. of the Epic of Creation (King, Seven Tablets of Creation), among the titles given to Marduk are: "Who had mercy upon the captive gods; who removed the yoke from upon the gods his enemies." And Pinches has now published a text ("Legend of Mero-dach," in PSBA, 1908, 53 ff.) which is a late supplement to that epic, and apparently continues the theme of the release of the captive gods: "He (Marduk) goes down to the prison, he rises to approach the prison. He opened the gate of the prison, he comforts them. He looked upon them then, all of them; he rejoices. Then the captive gods looked upon him. Kindly the whole of them regarded him." The "day of redemption" of our text is therefore in line with this Babylonian myth, and probably the passages from Isaiah and 1 Peter are also to be explained in consonance with it. This mythical trace probably descends from the Enoch literature.

5. Abuna is intruded awkwardly.—אסכלי for אסכלי.

6. זורי מורי: the root זור (מור, זור) is found elsewhere in these bowls, and also in those of Pognon and Lidzbarski (see Glossary C). It is used in parallelism with אסר, etc., in preventive magic. The verb means in the Aramaic dialects "to arm." But Pognon (B, 74) assumes for the noun זמראותא the meaning "admonition," and Lidzbarski (Eph. i, 96, n.) the sense of "binding up" a letter, etc. But there is no necessity in departing from the common meaning; it refers to the magical armament of persons and things with power to resist the forces of evil; so a passage in the Ginza: "Arm yourselves with arms not of iron" (ed. Petermann, p. 25, l. 20). That is, it is the magical equipment of a person or charm against evil. Paul may have been making use of well-known magical language when he exhorted the Ephesians to "put on the panoply of God," Eph. 6: 13. The following phrase, "a great wall of bronze," is equally parabolic; bronze possessed atropaic use in magic, like the other metals; cf. 15: 7, and see Pauly-Wissowa, i, 50; a Talmudic instance, Sabb., 66b.

אנה דבעת וי: our magician displayed the same assurance in No. 2. At least this confidence had its psychological effect on the client.

אתון בתריה: "hoist with their own petard"!

Wholly charmed and sealed and bound and enchanted [are ye], that ye go away and be sealed and depart from the house [and property?] of Farrûch bar Pušbi and Nêwândûch bath Pušbi and Abândûch bath Pušbi, and that there depart from them (2) all evil Lilitis and all Demons and Devils and Spells and Idol-spirits, and the Vow and the Curse and the Invocation, and evil Arts and mighty Works and everything hostile. Ye are bound with the seven spells and sealed (3) with the seven seals in the name of Eldedabya Abi Ponan, lord of spoil and curse I conjure against you in the name of the great Prince, that thou keep Farrûch b. "And YHWH said to Satan: YHWH rebuke thee, Satan, YHWH rebuke (6) thee who chose Jerusalem. Is not this a brand plucked from the fire?" Amen, Amen, Selah.

COMMENTARY

A general incantation against evil spirits for a man and his two sisters. The latter half Hebraizes.

1. The duplication of the ppls. is for intensity, "twice charmed." קטירין error for קטירין — לחישין, the only instance of this verb in the bowl-texts.

פרוך: cited by Payne Smith, col. 3246; cf. Farruchan and composites in farruch, Justi, p. 95 f.— מושבי?

נינורך, אבנורך: Justi, pp. 228, 1.

ורא: by heedlessness of construction; cf. 1. 3.

תנחח (also Talmudic) = זחח, see to 3: 2.

2. אסרי: the place of the term in the list shows that the charms were regarded as personal entities. Cf. above, p. 86.

"Seven spells," etc.; cf. the fever-remedy in Sabb. 66b, "7 twigs from 7 trees, 7 nails from 7 bridges," etc., etc. For this magical number in the Talmud, see Blau, pp. 73, 86, who quotes the Jewish maxim כל השבעין כל חביבין.

3. ארורבא: obscure, probably name of a genius; אבי may indicate his paternal relation to another well-known genius. For רביה cf. 2: 2.

"The great Prince": the technical title for Michael (see p. 97). It is to be observed that this bowl is peculiarly Jewish in theological form, while the following adjurations are in Hebrew. The double use of אשבעית introduces a mixed construction here. The verb generally is used of exorcism, with על of the object, = טען. But at the same time he adjures the great Prince, whom he addresses in the second person. All these terms denoting magical binding could be used indifferently of the good and evil genii. The angel is adjured in Hebrew, which according to belief was the only tongue the angels knew.

4. "The hobgoblins in the way of Hamad, the many"; cf. the Rodwell-Halévy bowl in which a geographical location is given, "upon the road to Huši," and Wohls. 2417, a demon who dwells in Samki. The reference is to the demons which beset some particular road. For the satyrs see p. 80. הרבים in the text is awkward.

5. Literal quotations from Num. 9: 23 (cf. 26: 1 f.). The applicability of this quotation lies in its triple use of the efficacious word שמר (as above in l. 3). Hence the magical use of such Psalms as the 121st, 122d, the Aaronic Blessing, etc. Later Kabbalism, found in the theme the abbreviation of שרים מזיקים רוחות, see Schwab, Notices et Extraits of the Paris National Library, xxxvi, 1 (1899), 288.

7. There is no evident sense in these words around the figure. אהע and אשר are reminiscent of the interpretation of the Name, Ex. 3: 14; להלה = "avaunt", משה = Moses.

A press which is pressed down upon Demons and Devils and Satans and impious Amulet-spirits and Familiars and Counter-charms and Liliths male (3) and female, that attach themselves to Adaḡ bar Ḥāthōi and Aḥath bath Ḥāthōi—that attach themselves to them, and dwell (4) in their archways, and lurk by their thresholds, and appear to them in one form and another, and that strike and cast down and kill. And this press (5) I press down upon them in days and in months and in all years, and this day out of all days, and this month out of all months, and this year (6) out of all years, and this season out of all seasons. And I come and put a spell for them in the thresholds of this their house, and I seal and bind them. Fastened up are their doors (7) and all their roof.

And this press I press down upon them by means of these seven words, by which heaven and earth are charmed: in the name of the first, Gišmîn and Marbîl; of the second, Gišmîn and Marbîl; of the third, Marbîl; of the fourth, Mašbar; of the fifth, Môrah; of the sixth, Ardibal; of the seventh Kibšîn (presses), with which is repressed (9) with them are repressed all evil Spirits and impious Amulet spirits and Liliths male and female and Familiars and Counter-charms and Words, that they appear not to Adaḫ b. Ḫ. and to Aḫath b. Ḫ. (10) and to neither in dream by night nor in sleep by day, and that they approach neither their right side nor their left, and that they kill not their children, and that they have no power over their property, what they have (11) and what they shall have, from this day and forever.

And whoever will transgress against this press and does not accept these rites, shall split asunder violently and burst in the midst, and the sound of him shall resound with the resonance of brass in the spheres of heaven, (12) and his abode shall be in the seventh (?) hell of the sea, from this day and forever. Amen, Amen, Selah.

COMMENTARY

A charm in behalf of a couple (each with a mother of the same name) and their household; the incantation consists in seven magical words, and concludes with a threat against any who destroy the bowl and ignore its ban.

1. כִּיבְשָׁא: cf. מִיטְלִי, 4: 1, and see § 8. Cf. the verb, l. 5. N. B. similar use of כִּבֵּשׁ in Pesiḫta R. 16 (Jastrow, p. 611): the sacrifices are "presses because they press down the sins."

2. נִיֵּס, also 12: 9, in both places before קִיבִלִי. Out of several possibilities of interpretation I suggest that of נִי in the sense of "side" (cf. 34: 4), and then one who is familiar (Jastrow, s. v.), hence = the παῖδες or familiar spirit of the Greek magic; e. g. the δυνειροπομοί and παῖδες in Justin Martyr, Ap. i, 18, Eusebius, H. E., iv, 7: 9, occurring also in the magical papyri, Dieterich, Abrahas, 161, n. They may be the genii invoked by manipulation or rubbing of the amulet as in the Arabian Nights. In Arabic superstition we learn of the "follower," tābī'u, that accompanies the bewitched man, Nöldeke, ZDMG, xli, 717. And cf. the Satan who is a "comrade" to an evil man, Karin, in the Koran (e. g. 41: 24), see van Vloten, WZKM, vii, 182 ff., נִיסָא could be the Syriac word for marauding troop, an appropriate description for a demoniac species, but the meaning given above is more appropriate in the context.

3. אֶדֶק: cf. the Persian name Adaces, in Ammianus, see Justi, p. 2, and cf. Nöldeke, Persische Studien, 417.

הַחֲחִי: cf. the Syriac name Hāthī, "my sister," cited by Payne Smith, col. 1408, here with the Persian diminutive ending.

נוֹבְתִיחַן: the Syriac גּוֹבָא, "transverse beam," hence probably door lintel,—so Payne-Smith, col. 670; radically the word refers to the arch of the doorway. For the abodes of the demons, see p. 76.

בְּדִמּוֹ דִּמּוֹ: the same phrase in the Mandaic, Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 216, 2.

רָמִן, מוֹחַן: cf. Mk. 9: 14 ff., Lu. 6: 4.

5. For the selection of a special day for the exorcism, see p. 55.

6. אִוְיָא: unique form; אִוִּל is treated in some forms as though אִוּוּ, and here metaplastically as אִוּוּ.

חֲבֵרְנָא: the only occurrence in the bowls of this ancient magical term. —The root צוּר is used here not in its Aramaic sense.

בִּיתְחֶחַן = בְּתִיחֶחַן, cf. l. 4.

7. רַבִּי אִינְרִי: cf. Pesah. 111b, רַבִּי אִינְרִי, of the demons.

8. These magical words are wholly obscure; see § 11.

10. "Sleep by day": cf. the special term in 7: 16. The midday siesta was perilous, especially for those in the fields; in the Greek superstition this was the chosen time for attacks by the satyrs and fauns, whose place was taken in Jewish legend by the קַטְבַּ מְרִירִי a demon representing sun-stroke, etc. See Grünbaum, ZDMG, xxxi, 251 f., and Roscher, Ephialtes.

Magical protection at right and left hand is frequently referred to in Babylonian sorcery; e. g. the Utukki-series iii, 93 (Thompson, i, 11); or four deities surround the sorcerer, in front and back, at right and left, ibid., iii, 142; the Maḫlu-series, vi, l. 123 f. Cf. 13: 7.

חִישְׁלִמְן: for the new vowel see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 25.

11. The penalty for infraction of the charm is bombastic enough! For the threatening of demons, see above, on 3: 6.

ניבר, נפקע, נעבר : Mandaizing spelling for עזא = אוחא ; also נופא, ניבר. A dialectic formula may be used here. N. B. נ of the preformative, נים from Syr. נסם, and נילי is Syriac over against the Rabbinic and Mandaic forms.

12. "In the seventh hell" (with awkward use of the numeral) in contrast to the seventh heaven. For the seven hells, see Eisenmenger, ii, 302, 328 f.

No. 7 (CBS 16007)

This bowl is a replica to that published by Dr. Myhrman of Upsala (No. 16081), see above p. 20. The latter is more perfect than my text, in fact almost the only perfect one in the collection; for this reason and also for the value of comparing the numerous variants I give the two texts in parallel, making such emendations as appear necessary in the first-published text, which amount chiefly to the proper grammatical distinction of yod and waw and he and heth. It may be observed that the designs in the two bowls differ: in 16007 merely a circle enclosing a cross, in 16081, a linear figure, the stem surmounted by a head capped, at the other end a pitchfork-like termination (the forked tail of the demon?), while four rays represent the limbs. On either side of the figure are three characters like the Greek Σ , or looked at from the side like Ψ , with which we may compare the Ψ 's shuffled into Pognon's texts, see p. 60. For convenience of reference I give the same line-numbering to Myhrman's text as to my own.

In the commentary I make such few notes as are necessary on Dr. Myhrman's ably edited text.

In thy name, O Lord of salvations, (2) the great Saviour of love.

I bind to thee and seal (3) and counterseal to thee, the life, house and property of this Yezidād (4) bar Izdändüch; in the name of the great God, and with the seal of Shadda El, (5) and by the splendor of Sebaoth, and by the great glory of the Holy One: that all ... Demons and all mighty Satans remove and betake themselves and go out (6) from the house and from the dwelling and from the whole body of this Yezidād b. I.

(7) Again I bind to thee (Myhrman, to you) and seal and counterseal to thee (M. to you) the life and house and property and bedchamber of Yezidād (8) b. I., in the name of Gabriel and Michael and Raphael, and in the name of the angel 'Asiel and Hermes (Hermes) the great Lord. [In the name of Yahu-in-Yahu] (9) and the great Abbahu and the great Abrakas (Abraxas), the guardian of good spirits and destroyer of evil spirits, I guard to thee (M. to you) the life, house, dwelling (10) and property of this Yezidâd b. I. And I seal to thee (M. to you) the life, house and dwelling of this Merdûch bath Bânâi, that there sin not against you (M. them) all evil Arts (11) and all (magic) Circles and all Necklace-spirits and all Invocations and all Curses and all Losses and all ... and all sore Maladies and all evil Satans and all Idol-spirits and all impious Amulet-spirits and all mighty Tormentors, (12) which under my own hand I banish from this house in the name of Pharnagin bar Pharnagin, before whom trembles the sea and behind whom tremble the mountains, in the name of HH, HH, and in the name of (13) Bar-mešteil, whose proscription is proscribed and none trespasses upon his ward.

Lo, this mystery is for frustrating you, Mysteries, Arts, and enchanted Waters and Hair-spirits, Bowls and Knots and Vows and Necklace-spirits and Invocations and Curses (14) and evil Spirits and impious Amulet-spirits. And now, Demons and Demonesses and Lilis and Lilihs and Plagues and evil Satans and all evil Tormentors, which appear—and all evil Injurers—in the likeness of vermin and reptile and in the likeness of beast and bird (15) and in the likeness of man and woman, and in every likeness and in all fashions: Desist and go forth from the house and from the dwelling and from the whole body of this Yezidâd b. I. and from Merdûch his wife b. B., and from their sons and their daughters and all the people of their house, (16) that ye injure them not with any evil injury, nor bewilder nor amaze them, nor sin against them, nor appear to them either in dream by night or in slumber by day, from this day and forever. Amen, Amen, Selah.

And again I swear and adjure (17) thee: May the great Prince expel thee, he who breaks thy body and removes thy tribe. And by the seventy Men who hold seventy sickles, wherewith to kill all evil Demons and to destroy all impious Tormentors,—are they cast prostrate in troops and thrown on their beds. Amen, Amen, Selah, Halleluia.

COMMENTARY

A charm made out for a man, his wife and household, against all manner of demons.

A comparison of these bowls, each written by a facile scribe with a well formed ductus, throws light on the history of the transmission and development of our magical inscriptions. Myhrman's text is shorter, in the other an appendix has also been added addressed against some particular but unnamed demon. The spelling in M. is more archaic, avoiding matres lectionis, the masc. pronom. suffix being represented by η alone, η is generally used for final a, the antique form ܡܗܢܝܦܝܩܝܢܐ is found (l. 6), as also the true reproduction of Hermes by η . Also my text is more confused in the arrangement of the exorcised powers, M. follows the historical order. Formally then M. appears to be the elder text, in comparison with which mine is more inflated.

The most interesting point of difference is this: in M. the sealing is done "to you" throughout, but in my text "to thee" (l. 2, etc.). This plural has justly troubled Myhrman, and he suggests three possible explanations. But I believe the only explanation is that his text is polytheistic or rather a product of the common magic religion; in expressing three names of "the great God" Elaha, Shaddai and Sebaoth, the magician regarded them as a trinity of deities, just as in the magical papyri these Jewish (and other) divine names are invoked as so many deities (see § 11).¹ M's text is then of eclectic religious character. My text abjures all such polytheism, but that it is secondary to the other is shown by comparing them in ll. 9 and 10. M. retains its polytheistic plural; my text has clung to the form, but misunderstanding it has read ܠܝܝ (i. e. $\text{ܠܝܝ} = \text{ܠܝܝ} = \text{ܠܝܝ}$), and I suppose made it refer to the following feminine ܢܦܝܫ , or to some feminine demon. For the same reason it reads, awkwardly, ܠܝܝ in l. 10 for the correct ܠܗܝܢ . Thus an eclectic text, or its original, in which the deities invoked are the names of the Jewish God, has fallen into more orthodox hands and produced our monotheistic text, leaving but a trace or two of its original source. Such are the complications of this magic!

1. The opening singular invocation does not agree with the following plural in M.

יִירָדָר : name of a Nestorian writer, Payne Smith, col. 1586; Justi, p. 149, thinks the Syriac form an error, but our text confirms it. Our word could be Semitic = יִירָר. Also note Izeddad in Justi, p. 147.

4. אִיוֹרְנֹרֶךְ : Justi, p. 146.

With אִסְפָּנֹ, M, cf. in addition to his reference to Ašpenaz, Dan. 1: 3, the name Ašpazanda, Clay, BE, x, 41.

5. צִיִּי : plural, "the rays of light." This and the following term represent Hebrew כְּבֹרֵי.

יִרְרִין, M: so the spelling surely, see above, p. 81.

6. "from the body": cf. the φύλακτῆριον σωματοφύλαξ, London Papyrus, l. 589, Wessely, xlii, 39.

8. For the angels, see § 13; for four angels (cf. the four gods surrounding the magician in Babylonian magic; see above, on 6: 10) see Lueken, Michael, 34 f. Nuriel-Uriel is generally the fourth. In Stübe, l. 58, עִיָּאֵל takes this place. עִיָּאֵל occurs in Sefer Rasiel, s. Schwab, Vocabulaire, 214, and probably in a text of Pradel's (p. 22, l. 16), where asa and apha doubtless = Asael and Raphael. N. B. the care with which the scribe rewrites the name of Asiel; all four names are made to terminate in -iel.

אִרְמִיס = מ. הֶרְמִיס (the latter the closest to the Greek of our spellings) = Hermes, see to 2: 2. Myhrman's suggestion, which I originally (and independently) favored, that the word is Hormiz = Ahura-mazda, is ruled out by the fact that that element in our proper names is given by הֶרְמִיז.

דְּבִיא, יִה בִּיא : cf. Stübe, l. 15 בִּישְׁמִיָּה יִהְבִּיָּה ; Pognon B, no. 5, יִה בִּיא, above 2: 2 (q. v.); יִהוּ בִּיָּה, 13: 7. יִהוּ ancient form of the divine Name, appearing (apart from biblical proper names and probable Babylonian forms) in the Assouan papyri, in the Greek magical papyri (Deissmann, Bibelstudien, 4 ff, Blau, p. 128 ff.) as Iaw, surviving among the modern Samaritans (Montgomery, JBL, 1906, 50, n. 5), and used in the magical texts current at Mossoul (PSBA, xxviii, 97). I think the doubled term here is theosophic: Yah-in-Yah; cf. the Christian Logos-doctrine and its terms, and Kabbalism. It is possible that Stübe's יהיה = Yabhēh (יאֶהָיָה) = Yahweh. At all events this spelling-out of the full Tetragrammaton occurs in a proper name below, 26: 4.

9. אֲבָהוּ, and מַרְנִין below, l. 12, probably correctly diagnosed by Myhrman as exalted sorcerers' names; see above p. 47. For the two Amoraim Abbahu, see Jew. Enc., s. v. A suggestion in another line is possible for Abbahu. King in his Gnostics and their Remains, London, 1887, 246, says that the Pantheus or representation of the pantheistic Deity of the Gnostics, appearing on the Gnostic gems, "is invariably inscribed with his proper name ΙΑΩ and his epithets ΑΒΡΑΣΑΣ and ΣΑΒΑΩΘ and often accompanied with invocations such as . . . ΑΒΑΑΝΑΘΑΝΑΑΒΑ, 'thou art our Father.' " Our Abbahu may represent this epithet and the passage would accordingly preserve three of the Gnostic designations of Deity: Yahu, Father, Abraxas. For Abraxas see above, p. 57, and for treatments of the subject and bibliographies the articles "Abraxas" in Hauck's Realencyk., Jewish Encyc., and especially the splendid monograph by Leclercq, in Dictionnaire de l'archéologie chrétienne, etc. Variants in the bowls are אֲבָרַסַס and אֲבָרַסִּים. These forms represent Abraxas as against the original form Abrasax, hence I use the former word in the present volume. Myhrman remarks (p. 345): "As over against the view of Blau-Kohler (Jew. Enc. i, 130b) this would prove to be at least 'a single reliable instance' of this name occurring in Hebrew"—or at least in a Jewish document, as my text is. Abraxas is found in Sefer Rasiel, 5a.

מַחְבֵּלָא, מַנְטְרָא: instances of the Syriac nominal formation from derived stems.

מַנְחָא: recalling the Jewish "good demons," see above, p. 76. The expression is also reminiscent of the Greek δαίμονες daímones, frequent in magic.

מַנְטְרָא (2d): ppl. w. suffix. It is represented by three ppls. in M., the second = מַנְחָא, which M. translates, with a query, "pierce." This is impossible; I would suggest to read ה for ח, and understand the Afel, = (Rabb.) Heb. הוֹבִיר, of naming a person to a deity and so placing him under his protection.

10. מִירְדִּיךְ: Mer-dücht, = Mithra-dücht, Justi, p. 208, Bemerk.

בִּאנָא = באנא 27: 8; a masc. name among the Jews, Sefer ha-Doroth ii, 84. But these names appear to be indifferently masc. and fem.; cf. 1: 4. The same name בִּנִי is found in Nabataean and Palmyrene inscriptions, Lidzbarski, Handbuch, 238, and = the frequent Babylonian Bâni-ia, cf. the name lists in Clay, BE, viii, pt. 1, pp. ix, x.

11. סֶרְנִין אִפְּיָא, occurring frequently in the unpublished No. 2918. I interpret this from the Syriac סֶרְנָא, as of the magic circle, cf. חֹמֶר רִבְאִיָּא, 39: 7, and see p. 88. The circle was used particularly for necromancy and devil-raising. Cf. Eliphas Lévi, Dogme et rituel de la haute magie, Paris, 1856, ii, l. 14. The objection to this interpretation is the entire obscurity of אִפְּיָא.

אִצְעָרִי: for אִצְעָרִי, cf. Maclean, Dict. of Vernacular Syriac, 193b; for the meaning, see p. 94, above.

For the epithet קִשִּׁי, cf. the epithets χαλεπός, violentus, etc., of the demons; cases cited by Tambornino, De ant. daemonismo, 15, 23.

12. "under my own hand": there is much imitation of legal forms in magical formulas.

מִרְנָן: evidently a Persian name; Myhrman as from farna, "good fortune," and gin (?) comparing Pharnakes, etc., Justi, p. 92-96. I may compare the Persian name Frenanh, Justi, p. 105b.

זַעַן, זַעִין, parallel to M's זַעַן, זַעִין, in the latter as from root זַעַן.

13. בֶּר מִשְׁתָּאֵל = M. בֶּר מִשְׁתָּאֵל, translated there "son of the inquirer of the oracle." We must go to the Assyrian for the explanation. There the corresponding form muštālu means one who gives an oracle upon being asked, i. e. an oracle-giver, and is an epithet of deity. See Jastrow, JBL, xix, 99, and the reff. in Delitzsch, Ass. Hwb., s. v. שָׂאֵל. The expression has the connotation of deciding the fates, with which cf. the following phrase in our text בֶּר דְּגִירְתִּיהָ נִוְרָא may here be used like the Arabic ibn, without modifying its regimen. Or may the phrase = bārū muštālu, "oracle-giving seer"? Some ancient phrase has been conventionalized and personified. For the following expression concerning the inviolability of the "decree," cf. 38: 8.

ט: מוראשי: ppl. pass. The root מרש came to be used particularly of poisoning. The מרש are probably "hairs," Syriac seppā. Any portion of a person's body, especially hairs, nails, etc., as detachable, could be used in magic directed against him. See Thompson, Scm. Magic, Index, s. v. "hair," and with abundant citation of comparative magic, Abt, Apuleius, 179 ff.; also Blau, p. 161.

14. For the appearance of devils in animal forms, cf. the reply of the demon to St. Michael in a text of Pradel's (p. 23): "I enter their houses metamorphosed as snake, dragon, vermin, quadruped."

15. גוּנִין = gʷānīn, cf. l. 16, vs. M. גוּנִין gawwānīn or gaunīn (?).

16. תִּיחְבֵּלֵן, תִּשְׁנֹן, תִּיִּשְׁנֹן: Paels, with ' for preformative half-vowel. I understand תִּיִּשְׁנֹן and תִּיִּשְׁנֹן, of the demoniac bewilderment of the victim (see Jastrow, s. ss.), or actual insanity. M. has for these verbs "לא תִּיִּדְרוֹן in their house"; Myhrman's translation, "shall not dwell," would require תִּיִּדְרוֹן. It looks as if תִּיִּדְרוֹן is for תִּיִּשְׁנֹן, or an error for תִּיִּדְרוֹן, from פִּרָּא = פִּרָּא.

שְׁחֲרֵתָא: so also 8: 11, but generally in parallel occurrences, e. g. Myhrman's text, שְׁחֲרֵתָא. The same noun is found in the Mandaic, שְׁחֲרֵתָא (Ginsa, Norberg's text, ii, 18, l. 12), and the verb, שְׁחֲרֵתָא (ib., l. 19). It means to "snore, sleep profoundly" (cf. Heb. חֲרָמָה) = Arabic ṣaḥara. Cf. 6: 10.

17. סַרָּא רַבָּא: cf. 5: 31 and see p. 97. מַפְסִיס: cf. Ass. pasāsu.

"70 men holding 70 sharp sickles": i. e. the 70 angels or shepherds, representing the 70 nations, Enoch 89: 59 (originally regarded as good angels, Schürer, GVV, iii, 198, n. 32, Lueken, Michael, 14, but later legend regarded them as fallen). The "sharp sickles" are an echo of Rev. 14: 14 ff., where the Peshitto uses the same words as here. This coincidence (cf. also Mt. 13: 37 ff.) argues for a common source of ideas.

שְׂחִיָּא: inf. of שְׂחִי, Targumic but not Talmudic.

מִסְחָתָא: Pael pass. ppl., of the Syriac and Mandaic root "prostrate." Or possibly cf. the Rabbinic meaning "put on a cover," with reference to the inverting of the bowls, see to 4: 1, 6: 1. The "beds" are metaphorical of weakness and subjection, cf. Is., 50: 11.

TRANSLATION

In the name of the Lord of salvations.

Designated is this bowl for the sealing of the house of this Geyônai bar Mâmâi, that there flee (2) from him the evil Lilith, in the name of 'YHWH El has scattered'; the Lilith, the male Lilis and the female Liliths, the Hag (ghost?) and the Ghul, (3) the three of you, the four of you and the five of you; [naked] are you sent forth, nor are you clad, with your hair dishevelled and let fly behind your backs. It is made known to you, (4) whose father is named Palḥas and whose mother Pelaḥdad: Hear and obey and come forth from the house and the dwelling of this Geyônai b. M. and from Rašnôî his wife (5) bath Mârath.

And again, you shall not appear to them in his (sic) house nor in their dwelling nor in their bedchamber, because it is announced to you, whose father is named Palḥas and whose mother (6) Pelaḥdad,—because it is announced to you that Rabbi Joshua bar Peraḥia has sent against you the ban. I adjure you [by the glory (= name)] of Palḥas your father (7) and by the name of Pelaḥdad your mother. A divorce-writ has come down to us from heaven and there is found written in it for your advisement and your terrification, in the name of Palsa-Pelisa ('Divorcer-Divorced'), who renders to thee thy divorce and thy separation, your divorces (8) and your separations. Thou, Lilith, male Lili and female Lilith, Hag and Ghul, be in the ban . . . [of Rabbi] Joshua b. P.

And thus has spoken to us Rabbi Joshua b. P.: (9) A divorce writ has come for you (thee?) from across the sea, and there is found written in it [against you], whose father is named Palḥas and whose mother Pelaḥdad, . . . they hear from the firmament (10) . . . Hear and they and go from the house and from the dwelling of this Geyônai b. M. and from Rašnôî his wife b. M.

And again, you shall not appear to them (11) either in dream by night nor in slumber by day, because you are sealed with the signet of El Shaddai and with the signet of the house of Joshua b. Peraḥia and by the Seven (?) which are before him. Thou Lilith, male Lili and female Lilith, Hag and Ghul, I adjure you by the Strong One of Abraham, by the Rock of Isaac, by the Shaddai of Jacob, by Yah (?) his name by Yah his memorial I adjure (13) you to turn away from this Rašnôî b. M. and from Geyônâî her husband b. M. Your divorce and writ (?) and letter of separation sent through holy Angels the Hosts of fire in the spheres, the Chariots of El-Panim before him standing, (14) the Beasts worshipping in the fire of his throne and in the water, the Legions of I-am-that-I-am, this his name And by the adjuration of holy Angels, byel the great angel, and by 'Azriel the great angel, (15) and by Kabkabkiel the great angel, and by 'Aqariel the great angel, I uproot the evil Necklace-spirits. Moreover you evil Liliths, evil Counter-charms, and the letter of divorce (16). And again, do not return to them from this day and forever. Amen, Amen, Selah. Sealed upon him Gabriel (?).

Again (I adjure you), evil Lilith and evil Spirit (17) or kill depart from this Rašnôî b. M. And be they preserved for life! Amen, Amen, Selah, Halleluia.

COMMENTARY

A charm for a man and his wife, particularly against the Liliths (a picture of one of which obscene creatures decorates the bowl), made out in the form of a divorce-writ. The inscription is very indistinct and towards the end becomes almost illegible. No. 17 is in large part an abbreviated and mutilated replica.

1. גִּינְיָא: Gewânâî (cf. 7: 15), or Ge(y)ônâî (from גִּינְיָא, or גִּינְיָא, "color"?). Cf. גִּינְיָא appearing in Bar Bahlul's Syriac-Arabic lexicon, where it is equated with wald, etc., to which Payne-Smith adds, "vox corrupta ex ḡover," Thes., col. 708.

מַמִּי, and below מַמִּיָּא, in No. 15 מַמִּיָּא: one of the most frequent feminine names in these texts; see Nöldeke, WZKM, vi, 309, Lidzbarski, Eph. i, 75 f., 97, n. 3; ii, 419. Budge in his edition of Thomas of Marga's Book of Governors (ii, 648) gives a note contributed by Jensen that Mami is a name of bêlît ilâni, the mother-goddess.

2. לִילִיתָא בִּישָׁתָא: the generic lilith is differentiated into several different species, the male and the female, the ghost and the vampire, hence "the

3, the 4, and the 5 of you" below. In the following text it is a question whether the 2d per. sing. or plur. should be read in many places. The two numbers are clearly distinguished in l. 7, end. But the obscurity consists in the equivalence of לְכִי and לְכִין, like the case of the loss of ך in the verbal forms in חִין in later Aramaic, e. g. חֲחִימִי, l. 11; also אַחֲחִי, l. 15, is plural, as בִּישְׁמֵחָא shows. Also the confusion of ן and ן in our script renders the distinction between masc. and fem. uncertain. Do the imperatives in l. 10 terminate in ִי or ִי, the latter a masculine form (inclusive of the feminine), the former possibly to be compared with the Syriac? My English "you" covers the uncertainty between sing. and pl.

בִּישְׁמֵחָא דְפֹרִי אֵל: a prophylactic "word," like the magical quotations from Scriptures; cf. a similar case at end of No. 42.

At end of l. 2 are named the five different "modes" of the lilit. שְׁלִיחָא and חֲטִיפִיחָא are unique demoniac names, found only here and in No. 17. The probable identity of חִ with the Arabic Ghul suggests connecting שִׁ with the Arabic si'lât; Lane, Lexicon, 1365, and at length his Arabian Nights, c. 1, n. 21, and also van Vloten, WZKM, vii, 179, who quotes an Arabic author to the effect that the Si'lât is the witch of the feminine Jinns. (The Arabic root sa'ala, "cough," = Syriac שָׁעַל). We have then to account for the loss of the ן. The form would be comparable to שְׁאֲרִיחָא. Another possibility is = Assyrian šālû, "ghost," Muss-Arnolt, Dict. 1036 (from עָלָה?), the formation being originally šēlānītu (cf. ēlānu from עָלָה). The witch or Ghul is preferable in the context, however in No. 39 the Lilit appears as the ghost of a dead relative, so that the context does not determine the etymology.

חֲטִיפִיחָא, or חֲטִיפִיחָא No. 17, "ravager," represents the Heb. חֲטִיפִיחָא ("ostrich"?—such is the tradition in Onkelos and LXX) in Targum Jer. to Lev. 11: 16, Dt. 14: 15 (where these two spellings also are found), among the unclean birds. Horrible bird-like forms were given to the demons by the Babylonian imagination, Jastrow, Rel. Bab. u. Ass., i, 281; also cf. Utukki-series, B, 35 f. The ostrich itself even in the rationalizing Old Testament is half demoniac; cf. the notes on the יִרְיָן, p. 81. Probably the חִ is exactly the Arabic Ghul, which is thus described by Doughty: "A Cyclops' eye set in the midst of her human-like head, long beak of jaws, in the ends one or two great sharp tushes, long neck; her arms like chickens' fledgling wings, the fingers of her hands not divided; the body big as a camel but in shape like as the ostrich; the sex is only feminine. She has a foot as the ass' hoof and a foot as an ostrich," etc. (Arabia Deserta, i, 53, quoted by Thompson, Sem. Magic, 60).

3. תליתין : for the sharpening of the vowel, t'liṭṭāi from t'liṭṭāi, see my notes on פריכא, p. 73.

סעריין : supplied from 17: 5, as also other bracketed passages. סעריין is sing., as סחיר shows. Nakedness and dishevelled hair are standing descriptions of the lilith, witch, etc. See references above, p. 77; add Kohut, Jüdische Angelologie, 88, and for Arabic legend, Wellhausen, Skizzen, 3, p. 32. The picture presents the abandoned character of the lilith—e. g. the Labartu is called a whore—, and also her shameful, outlawed position.

שמי עילין : על = ל as constantly in these texts and as in Mandaic. The naming of the demon's forbears has a compelling power, as part of name-magic; see p. 58. Cf. the naming of the parents of the demon באשטאטא in the invocation of his appearance in a charm of Wessely's (xlii, 60, from Brit. Mus. Pap. cxixiii). The same names distorted and applied vice versa appear in No. 17; similar names also in No. 11.

פוקי : often along with synonymous verbs, איתרחק, ווע, etc. Cf. the Babylonian ištu bitī ſi (Utukki-series, iii, 158), the long series of imperatives in Maḫlu-series, v, 166 ff., etc.; Mk. 9: 25, Acts 16: 18; in Gollancz's Syriac charms; in the Greek, e. g. Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 295, 298 (where the demon is also bidden not to disobey).

4. רשנו : probably hypocoristic from Rašnu, name of a Zoroastrian genius, see Justi, p. 259. Cf. the names רישנידוך, רישנידוך, in Glossary.

5. מרתא = מרתא (15: 2), "Martha."

6. "Rabbi J. b. P.": see commentary No. 32, and below, l. 7.

"by the glory of your father": hardly an appeal to the demon's sense of honor. יקר must be equivalent to "name," cf. the parallelism and the equivalence of the Name and the Glory in the Old Testament, where כבוד is also used of the human personality.

7. גיטא נחית לנא : the separation of the lilith from her victim is expressed in terms of a divorce-writ. This was a happy thought of the magicians, who thus applied the powers of binding and loosing claimed by the rabbis to the disgusting unions of demons and mortals. The logic of the procedure was very simple—if only the liliths were as submissive to divorce as their human sisters. The decree is frequent in these bowl incantations, and first appeared in Ellis's bowl, no. 1. But I do not know of any case of the occurrence of this magical Get outside of the bowls.

The magical writ affects the same forms and formalism as that of the divorce court.¹ In the parallel bowl, No. 17, a form of date is given (1. 10 יומא 1), which was a requisite in the legal Get. The names of both parties are exactly given, hence the parents of the liliths are here specifically named. The very terms of divorce are repeated in 17: 2: שביקת ופטרת ותרבית יתיכי; cf. the facsimile of a Get given as a frontispiece in Amram's work (פטרת שביקת ותרבית יתיכי). It was necessary that the writ should be properly served on the divorcée, hence in 26: 6, שקלי גיטכי: "take thy writ," a sentence consummating the process, and then the divorced demon must betake herself from her victim's property, as commanded by the peremptory; "Hear, obey and go forth" (1. 10). But there is a difference; against spiritual powers divine authority was necessary. And so it is affected that the writ has come down from heaven (1. 7), that is, it belongs to the category of writs from foreign countries for which there were special forms; hence the גיטא אהא מין עיבר ימא, 1. 9. The commissioners and witnesses are the holy angels, etc., 1. 9 f. A rabbi is also at hand to seal as notary the divine decree, none other than the famous master-magician Joshua b. Peraḥia. For a further phase of this "divorce-writ" see to 11: 7. In 1. 7, both the sing. and pl. are carefully used, so as to include both the definite lilith and also the whole brood.

7. חידוריבין, שימיעבין: Pael infinitives with first syllable in i.

פליסא: the root = "split asunder."

מחיב (?) may be ppl. from חוב in sense of Latin reddere.

11. "the house of Joshua": i. e. of the school of sorcery; in 34: 2 the sorcerer calls himself "J.'s cousin."

¹ See D. W. Amram, Jewish Law of Divorce (Philadelphia, 1896), esp. c. xiii; Jewish Encyc., s. vu. Divorce, Get.

בשבעה: "by the Seven"?—i. e. the seven angels, genii, etc.? The seven planets are so called simply in Syriac.

12. באביר אברהם וי': cf. Is. 49: 24, יעקב, א'; for the Rock of Isaac, cf. Is. 30: 29, Rock of Israel. The "Shaddai of Jacob" is unique. The scribe was not mighty in the Scriptures. But cf. Ecclus. 51: 2: "give thanks to the Shield of Abraham, to the Rock of Isaac, to the Mighty One of Jacob."

13. איגרת שיבוק: another term for the divorce-writ.

From l. 13 to end the text is largely mutilated or illegible; this is the more unfortunate as there are traces of interesting apocryphal or kabbalistic passages. Viz. "the hosts of fire in the spheres"; "the chariots of El-Panim"; "the beasts worshipping in the fire of his throne and in the water," with which cf. the glassy sea of Revelation. The following term ריגלי ("banners," then "cohorts") is a common word in the Targumic literature for the angelic hosts, according to Shemoth Rabba 15, = עבאות. (But the phrase may mean, "who is revealed as.") The language is Hebrew and the allusions are taken doubtless from apocalyptic literature.

14. עוראל is known as an angel of the divine chariot, Schwab, Vocabulaire, s. v., and עקריאל is found ibid.; n. b. play with עקרית.

15. The reference to the עקתא indicates that witchcraft is behind these devilish manifestations; the lilith and the witch are practically identical, see p. 78.

17. "may they be established for life"; cf. the finale of the Mandaic texts, "Life is victorious." The same expression in 12: 3, and the negative wish against devils in Wohlstein 2426: 9; but in his no. 2417: 22 the verb is used of the resurrection. At least the vague idea of immortality may be contained in the phrases.

TRANSLATION

The bowl I deposit and sink down, and the work (2) I operate, and it is in [the fashion of] Rabbi Joshua (3) bar Peraḥiā. I write for them divorces, for all the Līliths who appear to them, in this (house of ?) (4) Bābānōš bar Kāyōmtā and of Saradust bath Širīn his wife, in dream by night and in slumber (5) by day; namely a writ of separation and divorce; in virtue of letter (abstracted) from letter, and letters from letters, (6) and of word from words, and of pronunciation from pronunciations; whereby are swallowed up heaven and earth, the mountains are uprooted, and by them the heights melt away.

(7) Oh, Demons, Arts and Devils and Laṭbē, perish by them from the world! Therefore (?) I have mounted up over them (you?) to the celestial height, and I have brought against you (8) a destroyer to destroy them (you) and to bring you forth from their house and their dwelling and their threshold and all place of the bedchamber of Bābanōš b. K. (9) and of Saradust b. Š. his wife. And again, do not appear to them, neither in dream of night nor in sleep of day I dismiss you (10) letters of separation (11, exterior) In thy name have I wrought, YHWH, God, Sebaoth, Gabriel and Michael and Raphael. Thy seal is upon this besalmment and upon this threshold. Amen, Amen.

COMMENTARY

A charm for a man and his wife. The inscription is illiterate, and is largely parallel to (doubtless dependent upon) the Syriac text No. 32 = No. 33; also cf. No. 8.

1. רמינא ושקינא פורא: the same phrase appears in 32: 3 and 33: 1, whence the third word in the present text can be restored. It is very obscure and I propose the following explanation. פ is a synonym for כוסא "bowl," and is the Syriac and Mandaic פוחרא (puḥrā) which came to mean "symposium," but goes back to the root פחר, giving the words for the potter and his art, i. e. originally it was a potter's vessel. For the loss of the guttural in our present word, cf. Mandaic שורא for שחרא, etc. רמינא I take in the common Syriac sense of laying a foundation; the bowl was placed, as we have seen, at one of the four corners of the house. For שקינא, we must assume a parallel significance, and it is to be derived from שקע, treated as ל"א, in the similar sense "to sink" (the 1st Form is used as an active in Rabbinic). As the phrase appears in our Syriac bowls, which are largely colored by Mandaic idioms, the reference to this dialect is justifiable.

עוברא: see p. 51; in the parallels רעבור.

2. In the lacuna מיתרמנותא might be read. הוא הוא is a Syriac idiom, taken from the Syriac parallel.

3. בהרין ביתיה ר': awkward; probably for ר' in 32: 5.

4. בבנוש probably באבנוש in 1. 8. The first element is bābā or pāpā (Persian p often = Semitic b), Justi, pp. 54, 241, the second the Persian genius-name Anōš.

[קיוט]תא : was legible to the original copyist of these bowls in l. 8. The name signifies patrona. The masc. קיוטא appears in Pognon B.

סרדוטא : apparently a form of Zarathustra; see Justi, p. 379 f., where the frequent spelling Zaradušt is cited in names. But strange is the application of this masculine name to a woman.

שירין : cf. the name Sirin, Tabari's Chronicles, ed. de Goeje, i, 4, p. 100, l. 3.

רניטא דפטרין דשבוקן : the repeated ד defies construction; cf. l. 6. The terms all appear in No. 8.

בשום אות מתוך אות וגי : a parallel phrase appears in 32: 6; here the words are Hebrew. The general sense of these obscure phrases is clear; they refer to the magical use of letters and words and the manipulation of their pronunciations, such for instance as we find in the treatment of יהוה and in the Greek magic of the seven vowels. Cf. Pradel, p. 35, l. 9, "in the name of these angels and letters."

טוריא : a Mandaic spelling for the plural in ṭ.

למבי : a category appearing only in the bowls, see above p. 81, and Glossary.

בבין : probably the Targumic "therefore."

This and the following line are difficult by reason of an inconsequent use of the pronouns; the scribe was writing by rote. Light is thrown on the passage from 32: 8 f. (q. v.), where is given the tradition of Joshua b. Perahia's ascent to heaven, by which he obtained mastery over all evil powers. Our scribe boldly turns the 3d person of the legend into the first person—of himself,—an instance of the attempted identification of the magician with deity or master-magician.

לִימְרוֹמָא: so the parallel demands.

אִיתִיָּי: appears to be Afel; חִי- is hebraizing.

8. חֲבִילָא = מַחְבֵּלָא, Ex. 12: 23; in the parallel the abstract חֲבִילָא.

11. For the asyndeton connection of the angelic names with that of Deity, see above, pp. 58 f, 99, and note the Greek parallels. Sebaoth appears to replace one of the four archangels; cf. the personification of S. in Myhrman's text.

This amulet is for the salvation of this Nêwândûch bath Kaphni, and Kaphni her husband bar Šarkôî, and Zâdôî her son, and her house and her whole threshold, in the name of Yah, Yahu, Ah, (2) Sealed, and countersealed are this house and this threshold in the name of LLZRyôn and Šabiel and Gabriel and Eliel (3) And sealed are these, Zâdôî and Nêwândûch, with that seal with which the First Adam sealed Seth his son and he was preserved from Demons (4) and Devils and Tormentors and Satans. Again sealed and countersealed are these, the son of Šarkôî and Nêwândûch his wife b. (5) K. and Zâdôî her son, with that seal with which Noah sealed the ark from the waters of the Deluge. (6) And may they fly and cease and go forth and remove from them and from their house and their abode and their bed-chamber, from

COMMENTARY

A charm for a woman and her family. It is decorated with a figure having a beaked, bird-like face.

קמיעה: see Introduction, p. 44.

ניונרדך: for the name see to 5: 1; the same person appears in No. 11.

כפני : probably for Kafnûi, "the hungry one." The woman's husband and father had the same name. This is a case of the father's name being given, against the rule; for other examples, see 12: 1, Pognon B, p. 98, and the name פאפא, in Lidzbarski 5.

שרקוי : cf. the Persian name Serkoh Justi, p. 296.

זר(י) : the full spelling appears in l. 5; for the name, ibid., p. 382. A Zârôî appears in 37: 3.

2. אינחור ור : I can make nothing out of these words.

For Šabiel and Eliel, see Schwab, Vocabulaire, 251, 57. The first name is probably mystical.

3. הוא בזה : emphatic use of הוא; cf. Dan. 7: 15.

For these apocryphal references to the seal of Adam and Noah, cf. p. 64, and for the Jewish legends see Jew. Enc., s. v., "Seth," "Noah." It is in the Babylonian story not the Biblical that the hero shuts himself in.

5. טופנא : found in Targ. Onk. to Gen. 6: 17, = τρυφών, frequent in the Greek magical vocabulary.

No. 11 (CBS 16022)

A charm for a woman and her household, in terms of a divorce from the evil spirits.

The text would be legible only for a half, but for the interesting fact that it is one of four almost duplicate inscriptions. The longest and clearest of these is the Mandaic bowl, no. 5, published by Lidzbarski. Another is, remarkably enough, the first inscription of this category ever published, Ellis no. 1, in Layard, Nineveh and Babylon, 512 ff.; see § 2.¹ The latter is given in poor facsimile, and none has taken the trouble to collate afresh the bowl in the British Museum, a simple task which doubtless would have allayed the difficulties.

Of this text the bowl from Nippur is practically a duplicate, and, with the help of Lidzbarski's inscription, I am able to restore almost the entire text not only of our bowl but also of that in the British Museum.

There is also a fourth duplicate, No. 18. It can be read only by comparison with the three presented here, and so I have left it in its original place in my arrangement of these inscriptions, especially as it contributes nothing further to the understanding of their contents.

I have thought it worth while to present the three texts in parallel columns. This process facilitates the verification of emendations, while the variations which present themselves throw interesting light upon the natural history of magical inscriptions. We mark how magical terms which once had a meaning become blurred and obscured at the hands of generations of sorcerers and copyists, until sense becomes nonsense, or simple word or phrase receives a kabbalistic interpretation. The Mandaic appears to have the latest type of text, having evidently transferred its material from another script and dialect. Cf. the parallel texts in No. 7.

In the following texts I have slightly abbreviated the names in the 2d and 3d columns, and omitted a few unimportant phrases in the 3d (always so noted). It is not necessary to give a translation of Ellis's bowl, as the text is now almost entirely intelligible. The enumeration of lines in Ellis's text is according to the spiral lines.

Salvation from Heaven for this Nêwândûch bath Kaphni, that she be saved (2) by the love of Heaven from the Lilith and the Tormentor. Amen. Amen. Again, fly and refrain (3) and remove from Nêwândûch b. K., the Lilith and the Tormentor and Fever and Barrenness (4) and Abortion; in the name of him who controls the Demons and Devils and Liliths, and in the name of "I-am-that-I-am."

For the binding of (5) Bagdânâ, their king and ruler, the king of Demons and [Devils], the [great] ruler of Liliths. I adjure thee, Lilith Halbas, granddaughter of Lilith Zarni, [dwelling] in the house and dwelling of Nêwândûch b. K. and [plaguing] boys and girls, (7) that thou be smitten in the courses (?) of thy heart and with the lance of . . . , who is powerful . . . over you.

Behold I have written for thee (i. e. a divorce), and behold I have separated thee [from N. b. K. etc.], [like the Demons] (8) who write divorces for their wives, and do not return to them. Take thy divorce from Nêwândûch b. K. and do not appear to her, neither by night nor by day, and do not lie [with her]. And do not (9) kill her sons and daughters. In the name of Memintaš (?) keeper of Habgezig (?). Yô, Yad, Yať, Yať, Yať. By the seal on which is carved and engraved the Ineffable Name, since the days of the world, the six days of creation.

COMMENTARY

1. Nêwândûch b. Kaphni: the same as in No. 10; here without mention of a husband. It is also the name of the mother of the client in Ellis's bowl.

2. רחמי שמיא: cf. "the great Lord of love." "Heaven" is used here and in parallel passages as surrogate for Deity, after ancient Jewish use; the same use in 18: 1 and Wohlstein 2422: 3.

3. שערתא : a new word. I would connect it with the Arabic root s'r (Heb. שער, סער), with the meaning "be hot, rage," etc. See the various derivative nouns in Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, 1363: sa'r, "burning, shooting," su'r, "demoniacal possession, madness, mange"; sa'rat (our very form!) "cough," etc. Possibly fever, or poison. The Arabic su'r connotes infection.

4. תכלתא : "bereavement," then used of abortion, the reference being to a mischievous killing by magic of the unborn child.

It is unfortunate that in the first line of Ellis's inscription, the name following ניריך, i. e. "Nirig" is indecipherable from the facsimile. For ניריך = נירין, cf. נכל, on the Nêrab inscriptions, = Nin-gal. In אבטור טורא, the second word is a careless repetition of the first.

5. At the end of this line begins the parallelism with the two other inscriptions. Our very first word, which appears as one in a series of divine names, e. g. El-sûr, is explained from the parallel which shows that אל איסור was meant; the unusual form אל (= על) was taken to be = "god," and the passage became hopeless. The same process of corruption will be found below on the Mandaic side.

בנרנא : so in Ellis, but in the Mandaic bowl אבנרנא (= אבנבנא in Pognon B). See Lidzbarski's attempts at explanation. But our בנרנא is the elder form; see on 19: 6, 13, where ב' is both generic and personal.

מליכיתא : the first י is an error as the subsequent spelling shows; the second represents the half-vowel. The scribe in our text has been confused and repeated his words here. For the "king of demons," see p. 74.

חלבס = חלבס, חלדאס, in the three texts; cf. the names in the parallel texts Nos. 8 and 17: פלחס and פלחור, פלחור and פלח. Proof of the impossibility of etymologizing on these forms! The accompanying lilith in the Mandaic, תאבלה, must be connected with our תכלתא above; abortion is personified. The granddam of the lilith appears to be better known as it is identical in all three inscriptions. The two liliths in the Mandaic are interpreted by Ellis's text; they are the male and female respectively; cf. below, 1. 8, לא תשבין עימה.

7. טאפרוס = טופרס : these various forms throw no light on the word. It looks as if it were a corrupted Greek anatomical term.

ליבכי = ליבכי (Ellis): our text explains the reading of the elder bowl ללב = לבב, the former a metaplasis of the latter; the same form in 18: 7.

? = תיקס = קאטריאויס: the latter has, as Lidzbarski recognizes, a peculiar Mandaic form. I am inclined again to hold that the parallel shorter forms are more original. The reading in our bowl is different from the other two. For תיקס נברא cf. אברא נ', 3: 2.

הא כתבא: explained by the second column, where plus בכתבא i. e. the divorce-writ. Curiously enough the Mandaic has taken the interjection הא as a pronoun² and rendered it by האין.

פטרית: cf. Ass. paṭāru, "break a charm."

כמא שדי דכתבין נטי: cf. 8: 7. The additional thought appears here that inasmuch as demons divorce their spouses, divorce-writs must be as effective on them as among human kind. Cf. also No. 18. It may be noticed here that the first and third texts address a special lilith in the singular, the second goes over into the plural; the same uncertainty in No. 8.

עלה = עלוהי (= plural) Mandaism; so also below בנה 9.

בשום ממינח = Mand. אמתעמא, the second text obscure. Again no light! There is considerable similarity in the following magical syllables.

בעזקתיה נ': with the help of the parallels we can make out the reading. It and Ellis's inscription are almost identical. The Mandaic gives here a striking instance of perversion. The prepositional phrase עלה (or its equivalent) was understood as "God" and turned into אלהא; this took with it the pples. נליה and ציר, which were raised to divine dignity to accommodate the epithet אלהא. The invention appears to have been prized, as the deity Sir-Geliph is also introduced above in the same inscription. The שם מפורש is thus reduced to a travesty! The well-known Jewish phrase appears also in Schwab, E.³

³ For the true explanation of this term, see Arnold, Journ. of Biblical Lit., 1905, 107 ff.

Solomon's magic ring (first mentioned by Josephus) inscribed with the Tetragrammaton is the subject of Haggada in Gitt. 68a, b. Later legend, especially Arabic, developed the wonders of this magic ring.⁴ According to the end of our inscriptions this seal engraved with the divine Name was in existence since the week of creation (= בראשית). This is an addition to the ten things which according to Pirḳê Abôth, 5: 8, were created on the eve of the first Sabbath—among which were the alphabetic script and the tables of the Law.

COMMENTARY

A charm for a man and his wife and their seven named children, in the form of an adjuration of a certain potent angel. There is rubrical reference to a magical operation for compelling this angelic assistance. The same family appears also in No. 16 and the Syriac Nos. 31, 33. Prof. Gottheil has presented a tentative translation in Peters, Nippur, ii, 182.

1. דרבח: probably abbreviated from Dādbuyeh; see Justi, p. 75.

שרקוי: see 10: 1.

2. דאדא: Justi, p. 75, Dādā. The name is Semitic, e. g. Palmyrene and Syriac דאדא, from root דוד. The name looks like a masculine (for the use of the father's name see to 10: 1), but may equal דאדיא, 39: 2.

4. שובטי: for the form cf. Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 19, and for the species, p. 80 f., above.

5. כר גבילי (read דמות for דמות): a rubric directing an operation compelling the presence of the angel through a simulacrum and its manipulation. The insertion of the rubric into the text of incantation appears in the Babylonian magic, see King, Babylonian Magic, p. xxviii. It may be queried whether our sorcerer is not reciting a form unintelligible to him;

cf. the intrusion of rubrics into the Psalms. The ancient charm was for binding the good spirits as well as the evil; the incantation as well as the exorcism was a kardequm (see Heitmüller, "Im Namen Jesu," 2d part). In the early Babylonian magic images of the favorable gods were made and used in the rites; a good example is found in Zimmern's Šurpu series, no. 54 (p. 169 = Thompson, Sem. Magic, p. lviii). Probably idolatry has its basis in this magical idea. Reverence gradually obscured the idea that the gods were thus bound, it survived only in the word-magic. But in the present case a "horn" (symbol of power?), probably a cone of wax or the like is kneaded, and honey poured upon it, with which we may compare the antique anointing of the sacred stone or bethel,¹ wherein the suppliant literally "smooths" the face of deity (Heb. חלה).² The rubric is, I think, unique in Jewish magic. For the magical use of honey, see Thompson in Index, s. v.

6. מורה: for the plural, cf. instance in Jastrow, Dict., 834b; or the form may be regarded as parallel to מבורי.

We have here a bit of poetic lore about the angels, describing their worship and service of the Almighty. It appears to be a quotation from some Midrash. Who the angel invoked is, does not appear,—Michael? The terms שמו, שמו, are probably mysterious utterances to awe the hearer; cf. ômd, ômd, 3: 3 (from שמע, "hear," נשא "lift up in worship"?). For the description "blowing like the blast," etc., cf. Ps. 104: 4.

7. ציצית: cf. רעבאות. 7: 5. The description passes to a plural subject here.

נינירחן: a Rabbinical form; רגל = לרג = נגר. "foot." For נ = ל cf. Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., 54.

8. The choric dances of the angels are a pretty fancy, cf. Job 38: 7.

² For an extensive collation of like instances in Graeco-Roman magic see Abt, Die Apologie des Apuleius, 222 ff., 227. May the term in Apuleius, baetylus, the magic-god whose image is formed for purposes of sorcery, (a term much disputed by the commentators) = מלך = מלאך. the word used here?

9. For the גויסי and שיקופתא, see 6: 2 and p. 86. אנקי is a masculinized form of ענקתא (see p. 88).

10. הוניק: I cannot identify. The Glossary shows two other men of the same name.

יסמן: a Persian name, = "jasmine," cf. Justi, p. 145.

כופתיה: the same name in No. 2 (in אי-).

מהרוך: cf. Syr. טהרוכתי, Justi, p. 186.

פני: the Arabic Fannuyeh; see Nöldeke, Persische Studien, 405.

שילי hypocoristic of שילא, name of several Amoraim; see Seder ha-Doroth, ii, 347. Cf. biblical שלה, from שאלה שלי, also occurs in the Nabataean, CIS, ii, nos. 185, 208, 221. Nöldeke (in Euting, Nab. Inschriften, 74) vocalizes the name Sullai, and Berger (see to No. 208) compares the Nabataean name *Sullaio*s. But Lidzbarski (Eph., ii, 16) rejects this derivation and derives the hypocoristic from שלם.—Note that among these nine souls only one strictly Jewish name appears.

12. The scriptural quotation is from Psalm 121,—a psalm admirably adapted for a charm. Cf. note to 5: 5.

13. The two words: "of the room (recess, bedchamber, etc.), of the hall (also, cavern)" evidently refers to the place where the bowl was to be placed. The first word may be in construct state, or the two terms may be parallel, as the words might mean the same thing. אירון = Ass. idrānu, and is current in the Aramaic dialects. Jastrow defines אספלידא as especially a "sitting room in the shape of an open hall"; for some discussion of its etymology, see Payne-Smith, col. 315.

COMMENTARY

A charm for a certain woman against the reproach of barrenness, that her husband may love her and she may have children by him. The couple is the same that figures in No. 1, which is particularly a charm against the liliths; these are supposed to have prevented the natural fruit of the human union, affecting not only the woman but also the man's love and virility. At the end probably is given an aphrodisiac recipe.

This text and No. 28 are unique among early Semitic incantations, for they are love-charms. In this they bear the closest relation to the Greek erotic incantations, on which I will speak more particularly under No. 28. But in the present text it is the barren forsaken wife who speaks, not the passionate lover, as in No. 28 and the Greek charms. The incantation has a Jewish cast in its address to certain angels, whose names are expressive of love and in its use of biblical divine names. Apparently the text is shortened from a longer model. It is illiterate in style and script, and contains numerous Hebraisms. A feature is the use of a wedge-shaped sign (indicated in the transliteration by a comma), occurring as a separator between words, but without consistency.

I. סבירי : סבירי.

עממיה תנממיה ולישניה : either antique emphatic plurals, or else = Mandaic plural in סא—(see to 9: 6). The second word is an artificial enlargement of the Syriac tegma (ܬܥܡܐ) for the sake of assonance with ܥ (spelt in the usual archaic Syriac fashion). The passage is reminiscent of Dan. 3: 4. Do the words refer to classes of mankind, and the taking away of the woman's reproach among men? Or not rather to ranks of demons?—to whom we expect some reference; cf. p. 80. The closing of their mouths means forestalling their curses, cf. p. 85. תנמא is particularly used of the cohorts of evil (Payne Smith, s. v.) and in the Peshitto translates the "legions of angels" in Mt. 26: 53.

3. The three angels appear (upon some reasonable emendation) to have names corresponding to the verbs in the next lines. Angels were chosen, or invented, for the pregnant meaning of their names; so Raphael became the patron of healing. Rahmiel is the genius of love in No. 28, and in one of Thompson's Hebrew charms from Mossoul (PSBA, 1906-1907), which contain many incantations for love, love between man and wife, and also for breaking marital love; once we find a philtre in which the angels invoked are Ahabiel, Šalbabil, Opriel, names signifying love and its passion (1907, p. 328, no. 80). חביאל and חננאל are found in Schwab's Vocabulaire, and the latter also in Stübe, I. 56.

5. The line is obscure; it appears to present a dramatic scene in which the sorcerer and his client, in the presence of the adversaries, shall obtain judicial vindication of love from the favoring angels. The reference to Adam and Eve's offspring has a sympathetic value.

6. מילבוש וגו': assimilation of מן, as in Hebrew; for the idea cf. 2: 2.

מיעיל חיסדא: a common Semitic idiom; cf. Is. 61: 10, Eph. 6: 11; in the Samaritan, אלביש אימנוחא, בנר כפר ללבש (Heidenheim, Bibliotheca sam. ii, pp. xlii. 197, § 24); actual investing with "grace" occurs in the newly-found Odes of Solomon, 4: 7: מנו ניר נלבש מיכוחך.

7. מויה מויה: again Hebraic. The following word may be a ditto-graph, or a Pael of מוח. For this protection on right and left, cf. 6: 10.

For מויה see to 7: 8. אלאל, in the Mandaic religion, epithet of the sun-deity (Norberg, Onom., 9, Brandt, Mand. Schr., 31), also found in the Greek magic, Wessely, xlii, 67. It may be a magical reduplication; but cf. the reduplication of אל in the South-Arabic plural, and the Hebrew אלי, probably once a divine name—to be connected with Ellil of Nippur?—see Clay, "Ellil, the God of Nippur," AJSL, 1907, 269.

8. כל אמו. cf. 15: 2.

דריסח: this spelling occurs also in a neo-Syriac manuscript published by Lidzbarski (Die neu-aramäischen Handschriften der königl. Bibliothek z. Berlin, Weimar, 1896, 447); otherwise דרוסת = צרוסת. For a discussion of the word and its origin see Nöldeke, Neusyrische Gram., 386.

קִים וְשִׁירָר: the same formula in Lidz. 5.

At the end of this line which is on the edge of the bowl, the scribe has attempted to continue and has written a few characters; he then started afresh on the exterior.

9. קל : קל קלא is used like the Hebrew קול. The piteous plaint of the sufferer is thus expressed, to move the sympathy of the celestial ones. In the same way the Babylonian magical texts preface their rites with a description of the plight of the patient; also the biblical Psalms often commence in like manner. A similar phrase appears in a bowl of Pognon's, B 20, but there the reference is to the curses of unfortunate souls which alight on the living. There may be the reference here to such a ban—of a virgin gone to her death without children. In this case חסי (= biblical חס, Syriac חס), would refer to the stilling of her "tongue." (Cf. the magical use of ḥṣ in a text of Wessely's xlii, 60 f.). But the repetition in l. 11 inclines me to the view that the virgin who "travails and does not bear" is the wife, subject perhaps to miscarriage or feminine maladies. Then חסי would be from חוּס = חוּשׁ, "hasten," and so = "quickly," cf. Ass. חסא; the word would then correspond to the frequent ḥṣ ḥṣ ṣaḥṣ ṣaḥṣ as at the end of the Hadrumetum love charm (see to No. 28), and see note to 14: 4.

חבבי נחבי נחבי: the verb used for "love" is חבא, where we expect חבב; cf. Heb. אהב. For this triple adjuration, see No. 28.

10. לִגְוָה בִּיחִי וְיָ: I have tried in my translation to express the difficult word גִּוָּה, which primarily "body," comes to mean the essence, essential thing. The reference is sexual, and the word has such connotations (see Jastrow, s. v.).

11. בְּתוֹלְתָא בִּי אֲבִלִי: this appears to be an error for בְּתוֹלְתָא, as in l. 9; or possibly ppl. fem. in -iê, "mourner"? בִּי ... בִּי are used correlatively, and we must suppose a lacuna: as she (was) in the joyless condition of childlessness, so (her future state shall be symbolized by) fresh myrtle for crowns. Some literary form has been so rubbed down as to be almost unintelligible. For this correlation of בִּי ... בִּי, see some, as yet unnoticed cases in the Hebrew, e. g. Gen. 18: 20.¹ Myrtle as sacred to the goddess of love (Baudissin, Studien, ii, 198 f.) makes an appropriate simile.

12. אפרפרט ו'. this line is provokingly obscure. Since a magical philtre is here prescribed, I venture to suggest that פ' = Latin praeparatum (the verb being used by Pliny for preparing drugs, foods, etc.). Or it may be the Rabbinic פרפרת, "hash, salad" (which however does not explain the ט). האמץ is leaven, which as a ferment would be appropriate to an aphrodisiac. אעיקהי is fem. imperative, "press it." Aphrodisiac herbs, used magically or medicinally, are common in all erotic praxis.

COMMENTARY

A charm for a certain woman, in the name of YHWH and the angels, against some definite (now obscure) demon in particular, and against the devils in general.

2. מן מץ: the syllable is Athbash for יה; cf. יהוה = מַצֵּץ, Stübe, l. 66 and p. 63. אַנְרִיבִּים is probably also a mathematical anagram for the divine name or power; cf. Abraxas, = אַבְרָכִים, etc. (see p. 57, and to 7: 9), of which the present form may be a corruption. The syllable סף seems to have suggested the sea of סוּף. יהוה is for יהוה.

3. דָּוִיד: the lacuna makes the reference obscure; a reference to one of the Psalms of David, or, by error to the Song of Moses?

דָּאֶשְׁרֵי שְׁכִנְתָּהּ: the Targumic phrase, e. g. Di. 12: 5.

וּבְרָא בְּחִיכָל נֹרָא: hail and fire are frequently found together in the Old Testament as manifestations of the divine presence; e. g. Ps. 18: 13 f. Ezek. 38: 22. But cf. especially Rev. 11: 19: "Then was opened the temple of God that is in heaven; and there was seen in his temple the ark of the covenant; and there followed lightnings and voices and thunders and earthquake and great hail."

4. יַחוּשׁ, יַחוּשׁ, יַחוּשׁ: cf. יַחוּשׁ, l. 7; Yâ = interjection "Oh." Reitzenstein has called attention to the equivalence of these expressions (commenting on Stübe, l. 14, Poimandres, 292, n.), to the ἡσὺ ἡσὺ ἡσὺ ἡσὺ of the Greek magic, as applied to demons in the sense of "at once avaunt." For examples, see the endings of nos. 3, 5, 6 in Wünsch, Antike Fluchtafeln, and the editor's note p. 13. Cf. a Christian charm in Pradel's, p. 72: veniat sanatio celeriter, abeat abeat abeat malum.

5. All these angel names are found in Schwab's Vocabulaire, our סְרַמְיָאֵל being probably the same as the סְרַמְיָאֵל there. For magical references to Suriel, see Lueken, Michael, 71.

6. The sorcerer spares himself the trouble of naming the evil spirits by applying a "blanket" charm to them all; cf. 1: 14.

וִידְלָא: see to 3: 3.—אִידְרָבִּית: evidently a confusion between the passive and the 1st person active.

הַחֵן: the only instance in these bowls of this rare demonstrative; elsewhere here חֵן

7. תְּרַמְקָא: probably Etpeel.—For the curse at the end cf. 7: 17.

A charm for several persons, whose relations to each other are not definite. They may be members of one household—a kind of Pension. The virtue of the charm lies in the use of a doggerel couplet. The figure in the center of the bowl is a serpent with its tail in its mouth; see p. 54.

1. חורמי: for this abbreviated form of Ahura-mazdah, see Justi, p. 98, the same name in Lidz.

מאמי = מאמאי, as in No. 8.

דודי: 38: 4, דודאי; hypocoristicon from דוד, "friend, uncle," etc.; cf. the biblical name דודי and its variant דודי, also Dādā, 12: 2. The present name is feminine; may it mean the dūdāi, "love-apple"? Justi, p. 86, lists a Dūdai.

2. מררח: a Jewish name found in the Gospels and in a Palestinian ossuary inscription (Lidzbarski, Handbuch, 318) = מארח, 8: 5.

ברנלל: a proper name after Arabic formation? נלל = "round lump, excrement," etc. Galal is a biblical name.

ברשיבני ש': is a form of necklace charm, see to l. 6. The mother has named her child after the amulet whose virtue she supposed gave to her or protects the babe.

טשיהראור: the Persian Cihrazād; see Justi, p. 163. The טש is an attempt to represent the Persian hard ch. The name is the same as that of the famous raconteuse of the Arabian Nights.

3. ביתח: doubtless referring to Dodai, who appears to have procured the charm for the household.

4. לאם מן סליק וי': this and the following line contain a magical incantation expressed in a rhyming doggerel couplet. (In the first occurrence of ואטרפי, the ר was first omitted, then written above, and finally the word was rewritten that there might be no infraction of the charm.) First of all, there is a couplet rhyming at the caesuras and at the end;

then the last line is repeated in l. 5, introduced by the obscure combination ביהירין. A similar doggerel formula is presented by Myhrman in his edition of the Babylonian magical Labartu series (ZA, xvi, 188; cf. Jastrow, Rel., i, 339). It is there called a šiptu, "incantation," and runs thus (following Jastrow's arrangement):

ki | rišti libiki | rišti la libiki | la libi | piš | pišti ša
anzišti | ša anziš | šu anziš | anziš.

For Greek parallels see p. 61. The repeated מנא of the couplet is taken up by בינתי ומנתי. The roots מנא and בן may refer to the scansion of the couplet.

5. שיקן = the Arabic demon šihk—sometimes interpreted as one-half (šihk) man, one-half demon, but probably a demon of weariness; see Lane, Arabian Nights, c. 1, n. 21, van Vloten, WZKM, vii 180.

6. יריון: see p. 81; here between categories of maladies, in Myhrman between "devils" and "spirits."

שיבן: the Targumic שבין (Jastrow, p. 1510), a feminine ornament, some kind of pendant chain, see Krauss, Talm. Archäologie, i, 204 and note; belonging to the category of חומרי, ענקת, etc., see p. 87 f. Cf. the name above ברשיבני, where the uncontracted form survives.

7. Brass, lead, fire, all potent against demons. Cf. the "chains of lead," 39: 4 f. The bonds of hell are called catenae igneae in a Latin charm, Wünsch, Ant. Fluchtafeln, no. 7; also the "adamantine chains" in Paris Papyrus, Wessely, xxxvi, l. 1227 ff.

9. Mehôî: hypocoristic, cf. Mehducht, etc.

COMMENTARY

A charm for the large family that appeared in No. 12. It contains an extensive and repetitious list of demoniac species.

5. ܒܝܫܡܐ ܐܢܝ: I have translated literally; the original form may have been: ܒ' ܝ' ܕܐܠܗܐ ܟ' ܕܩܪܝ ܚܪܫܝ ܠܝܗ "the great name ... which magicians invoke."

6. ܕܒܝܫ: ppl. act.

7. "Sons of darkness": contrast the "sons of light," 1: 9.

8. ܪܒܪܒܝ ܕܚܫܘܒܐ: cf. the Pauline πολλοὶ ἀσθενήσαντες τοῦ ἀνδρός τούτου, Eph. 6: 12.

ܝܠܝ: lit. "foul and laboring spirit" (breath; in Bekor. 44b (an obscure passage) there is a disease or demon called ܢܐܠܐ, which is interpreted as "asthma" (Jastrow, s. v.). Foulness of breath was cause for divorce, Krauss Talm. Enc. i, 256. Cf. the ܒܪ ܢܝܦܠܐ of 29: 7, which is found in the same passage from Bekoroth.

This day above any day, years and generations of (2) the world, I Kômêš bath Maḥlaphta have divorced (3) separated, dismissed thee, thou Lilith, Lilith of the Desert, (4) Hag and Ghûl. The three of you, the four of you, the five of you, (5) naked are ye sent forth, nor are ye clad, with your hair dishevelled behind your backs. (6) It is announced to you, whose mother is Palḥan and whose father (Pe)laḥdad, ye Liliths: Hear and go forth and do not trouble (7) Kômêš b. M. in her house. Go ye forth altogether from her house and her dwelling and from Kallethâ and Artašria (8) her children. I have warded against you with the curse which Joshua bar Perôhiâ (sic) sent against you. I adjure you by the honor (name) of your father (9) and by the honor of your mother, and take your divorces and separations, thy divorce and thy separation, in the ban which is sent (10) against you by Joshua b. Peraḥia, for so has spoken to thee Joshua b. P.: A divorce has come to thee from across the sea. There is found written (in it), ye whose mother is (11) Palḥan and whose father Pelahdad, ye Liliths: And now flee and go forth and do not trouble Kômêš b. M. in her house and her dwelling.

I bind (12) and I seal with the seal of El Shaddai and with the seal of Joshua b. Peraḥia the healer, healing and release from Heaven for Abâ and Yazdid and Hônîk sons of Kômêš. Thwarted and frustrated are all Injurers, whom we have removed by the ban upon them. Amen, Amen, Selah.

COMMENTARY

A charm effected by a woman for herself and her children, who appear in two different groups, in the name of Joshua b. Peraḥia. It is an abbreviated and often incorrect replica of No. 8.

1. For the corrupted formula, cf. 6: 5 and see p. 55. The full form appears in no. 16020 (unpublished) "this day out of all days. I Honik," etc.

2. כומיש, l. 7 כמיש: the name obscure; cf. Κομισαρις, Justi, p. 165.

מחלפתא: for this name, frequent in these bowls, and its equivalents, see Nöldeke, Encyc. Bib., s. v. "Names," § 62.

שביקת: Peal, the following verbs Pael.

3. For the singular and plural number, see to 8: 2. The word lilith is spelt badly. For the singular לִי דברא cf. 29: 7, and see p. 78; the parallel has לִיִּי דברא.

5. The correct grammatical forms are found in 8: 3; the lilith names following are also mangled.

6. תמיסין: Afel of נמס.

7. כלתא, i. e. "bride"; cf. the Babylonian name Ina-ekur-kallatu, cited to me by Prof. Clay.

ארטחשרה: a form of Artachšathra, and cf. Ἀρταχσθης, Justi, p. 35.

8. פרומיה: so l. 12, but the correct spelling in l. 10; probably assimilation to Persian farruch.

For "glory" = "name," see on 8: 8, and n. b. the equivalent πατίσων δόξαι, Wisdom, 14: 24.

9. דאח שלחתן f. pl. impr. of נסב; but שמעו in l. 6. The following is a perversion.

10. ליני = לבא.

11. פמטו = מוטו, cf. פק, l. 7, plus conjunction פ; for another instance see Glossary; probably a dialectic survival. פ appears in the Senjirli inscriptions and the Elephantine papyri.

12. אסיא: the same title in 34: 12.

פטרמ: formation from Pael, = Rabbinic פטרמ.

אבא: frequent Talmudic name, Seder ha-Doroth, ii, 3-18.

זירד: probably error for זירד, see 7: 3.

13. פירקין: Pael, 1st pers. plural.

COMMENTARY

This inscription is yet another duplicate to the three collated under No. 11. It is badly written and mutilated, and would be in large part unintelligible without the other texts. It presents little that is new and a translation is not necessary.

1. The name of Ephrah's father is uncertain. From what appears here, it may be אחיה; cf. בראייה, in Seder ha-Daroth ii, 47. In 1. 9 it looks like אַיִי, i. e. Ayē? But the strokes may be for abbreviation.

2. A prayer for offspring is here expressed.—אִיצְפַּנְדוּי: hypocoristicon for איצפנדורמיר, see 26: 4.

5. בחלבם: again this name differs; but the tradition of the granddam's name is accurate.

דאפרה: i. e. באבה דא.

דבא: ppl. of דאבא.

דירקִי: if not an error, this is a further development of a word with a history: daḫdaḫ = dardaḫ = darak.

מימי ציחא: the probable reading. ציחא is biblical. The dirty habits of these foul demons appear in the Babylonian magic; they are compared to pariah dogs and are exorcised by the spirit of foul streets, see Utukki series, B, 46; cf. v. col. 5. l. 21.

8. הפטרית: for הא פ'.

9. קרחו: if we read so, we may compare the magic formula in Pesah. 110a, קרח קרחייכי (see to 1: 6). The verb = ערק, by transposition, common especially in Mandaic. Lidzbarski in his parallel (see to No. 11) reads קרא and translates "spring up"; but read there קרא = קרח.

In thy name, O Lord of salvations, the great Saviour (2) of love.

Charmed and sealed and countersealed is the whole (3) person and the bedchamber of this Mešaršîa, surnamed (4) Goldsmith, bar Maḥlaphtâ, with the seven spells which may not be loosed, and with the eight seals (5) which may not be broken.

In thy name, lord Ibbôl, the great king of the Bagdâni; and in thy name, our lady Ibbôleth, (6) the great queen of the goddesses (she-demons?), and in the name of Ṭalasbôgi the great lord of the Bagdâni; and in the name of Sahnudmuk; (7) and in the name of Ibbôl son of Palag; and in the name of Angarôs; and in the name of the Lord, the Word and Leader and Armasa (Hermes); and in the name of Azpâ and 'Alim; (8) and in the name of Nakderôs the lord of ...; and in the name of Seraphiel, lord of judgment and of (divine) beck; and in the name of the 60 male gods (9) and the 80 female goddesses; and in the name of Ardisaba (or Ardi) the most ancient of his colleagues; and in the name of Anad the great lord (10) cast above (him) iron and bronze, and fastened to him fetters (?) of lead and the 70 exalted priests of Bagdânâ; and in the name of Bagdânâ son of Habâl (destruction). (11) ...; and in the name of Palnini and Mandinsan and Menirnaš ...; and in the name of Iras son of Hanas; and in the name of Abrakîs (Abraxas); and in the name of Agzariel, who is without compassion; (12) and in the name of Arzan and ..., rôs berôs delterôs; and in the name ... to Ariel he sent a message: "Lift up" (?), ... to the great Ruler before him; and in the name of ...; and in the name of lord Ibbôl (13) the great angel of the Blast-demons, and in the name of the great God and the great Lord of the Bagdâni; in the name of Ariôn son of Zand: Ye are charmed and armed and equipped.

Against all Demons, Devils and evil Satans; this charm (14) and bowl is sure and its seals established against them, from whose charm none ever goes forth and from whose control none sallies forth.

In the name of these charms are bound there Demon and Danḥiš and the evil Lilith (15) which are in the body of this Mešaršîa, surnamed Goldsmith, b. M., by charms in earth and by seals in heaven.

Again, (ye are) charmed with a charm and sealed a second time away from the body of this Mešaršîâ, (16) etc., Amen.

Again, charmed are the Demon and Devil and Danhiš and Amulet-spirit and Idol-spirit, which are upon the body of this Mešaršîâ, etc., by Ibbôl, (17) and sealed by Ibbôleth.

Again, charmed by Šinas and Manâ, and sealed by fire.

Again, charmed by the great gods and sealed by Ariôn son of Zand.

Again, charmed by the seal of the family of Hanûn, and sealed by the great ... of Zeûza (Zeus).

Again, charmed by the true God, and sealed by the great Ruler (18) who is before him, away from the body of this Mešaršîâ, etc.

In the name of Paṭragenôs, Okinoš (Okeanos), Šunkâ, Kôsâ, Kapâ, Azaziel (19) his constellation (?), that this Mešaršîâ, etc., be sealed from the top (?) of his head to the toes of his feet they shall not be, nor this house of Mešaršîâ, (20) etc., shall they enter nor approach, nor appear therein, neither by night nor by day, from this day and forever.

COMMENTARY

A charm made out for a certain man whose body is infested with evil spirits; with great elaboration of incantations they are exorcised from him and his house. The inscription is thoroughly pagan, and is interesting because of its invocation, for over half its length, of an extensive list of deities. Cf. a similar long list in Wünsch, Ant. Fluchtafel, no. 4. Unfortunately by reason of the coarseness of the script and its general illegibility, most of these names are obscure. Some of them are definitely Greek,—Zeus, Protogonos, Okeanos, and perhaps the Aeons, male and female, may be made out; several others are of Greek formation. Others again are of Persian origin, and some are purely charm-words, "mystical" names. Some forgotten cult may have given certain of the names; notice the reference to the 70 priests of Bagdana.

2. חתמא: error for חתימא.

3. קומתיה: the word = "stature," then, as here, "body," as is shown by the phrase, in a similar connection, in bowls published by Schwab (E) and Stübe (ll. 56, 64): the demon depart, etc., from the 248 קומתיה of such a one (the word is not recognized by either editor). The same word occurs in the interesting magical passage in Eze., 13: 18.

משרשיה: also in Schwab, G; a frequent Talmudic name (see Sefer ha-Doroth, ii, p. 276).

4. דהבאי: this surname appears as a proper name in Hagiga 2a.

"Seven spells eight seals": for this cumulative expression, cf. Mica 5: 4; see 5: 2.

5. בשמיד: cf. 28: 1.

איבול: also below, ll. 7, 16. In l. 7 he is בר פלג, and his consort איבול is "our lady." Professor Clay has cited to me a divine name Ubbulti appearing in a Cassite tablet, in the name Ubbulti-lišir. אובול might also be read, and I am inclined to make the word = Syriac ubbālā, "generation," etc., and so Alav. For a discussion of Aeon as supreme deity, god of time, etc., see Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 269 ff. The Aeons appears in the magical texts, e. g. Dieterich, Abbrasax, 140, l. 51; 192, l. 21; 203, l. 18. The syzygies of Aeons were male and female—cf. the names in Origen's list at the beginning of his work Adv. haer., and איבוליה would be a formation to express the female Aeon. Derivation from Apollo also suggests itself, but the feminine is not thereby explained.

6. בגדני: Comparing what precedes, the word means some class of deities or demons. In l. 13 בגדנא is a divine name, = the demon in 11: 5 (q. v.). It is then a word like אלהא, etc., which can be used individually or generically. It evidently contains the Indo-European element bāga, "god." It is difficult to decide whether Bagdana is a propitious or maleficent demon (as in No. 11); in the latter case he is charmed to work the good of the sorcerer's client, as in the Greek incantations, e. g. Hekate. In W. T. Ellis's Syriac text (see § 2) appears מריא בגדנא, "Šamhiza the lord Bagdana," or "the lord god"? The spelling gives the vocalization of the penultimate vowel. For Š. cf. the Enochian Šamaeza.

7. אנגרוס: the ending -וס in this and other names recalls Greek formations. May this word = ἀγγελος?

מלילא: in Syriac, "logical," etc., and used nominally = $\pi\lambda\lambda\acute{o}\gamma\iota\sigma\tau\alpha\iota$. It is here associated with ארמסא, both being names of a potency; the passage is parallel to 2: 2, q. v.

מרנלא: if the reading is correct, the Rabbinic רנל, Afel, may give the interpretation,—"leader," which would be a fitting epithet of Armasa-Hermes, "the shepherd" par excellence. Cf. the idea in the late Hellenistic religion of a deity, especially Hermes, as a guide, $\eta\gamma\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\sigma$, of souls; see Cumont, The Oriental Religions in Roman Paganism, n. 63 p. 253. It may be noticed that כנ is used in the Talmud of a "traditional word or saying" (Jastrow), i. e. = logos?

8. סרפאל: also 14: 8. In his epithet, רימא appears to be used, as in the Syriac, of the divine nod or intimation, i. e. "command."

9. סבתא קשישא: or the name is to be read אררי, followed by קשישא סבתא; why the fem. סבתא?

10. In this and the following line most of the words can be read, but in consequence of the failure of the context the text defies interpretation. The three metals may be referred to as having magical properties, and this may give the clue to סליתא דאברא (written first erroneously). Comparing the Mandaic text in 39: 5, בששלאתא דאברא, (עסירא), the equation suggests that our סליתא = "chains"; possibly סליתא "basket," and here used of a metal cage.

בר חבאל = "Son of destruction"?; cf. בר חנס, l. 11, 1. 13; these deities are given a parentage like איכול, l. 7. Possibly חנס is חנס, the verb used in the Nerab inscriptions, and so = חבאל.

11. אברס: = $\epsilon\pi\alpha\rho\sigma$, or $\alpha\beta\rho\sigma$ —אברס: cf. 7: 9.

אגוראל: גוראל is found in Schwab, Vocabulaire. Is אגוראל "God's cruel one," meant?

12. The accumulation of words in ros is a charm formula; see p. 61.

13. מלכא = זקני: the זקני with Mandaic spelling.

ארין בר זנר: found also in 34: 8, which determines the reading here.

אתח וני: the plural is problematic, as there is but one client to this charm; it may have been used inadvertently. חליי is not Aramaic in its present sense.

14. דנחיש: this obscure demon appears again in l. 16; it is evidently the planets listed with the planets in Libzbarski's Mandaic amulet in the de Vogüé Florilegium, l. 251.

17. שינאס: cf. the Mandaic סיניאוס, name of an angel, Lidzbarski, Ephemeris, i, 104, n. 2.

ועזא: Zeus, = Syriac זוז, in Jacob of Sarug (Martin, ZDMG, xxix, 110, l. 50), otherwise זיז and זיז.

מנא = the Mandaic genius Mana? See Norberg, Onom. 96.

בית חנן: the family or school of some magician like that of Joshua b. Peraḥia, see p. 46.

18. אוקינוס = 'Ωκεανός, the parent deity in magical theosophy (cf. Ea in the Babylonian); see index of Dieterich, Abraxas. The preceding name recalls Protogonos who appears with Aeon as son of Kolpia and Baau in Sanchuniathon's cosmic genealogy, Eusebius, Præp. ev., i, 10.

19. לילבי: cf. 11: 7. מלואשיה: an astrological reference?

טורפת ריגליה ... מין: the same phrase in Pognon B, except that the word זימחא, "hair," appears there.

COMMENTARY

A charm against ghosts. The interest of this bowl lies in the figure decorating the center. It represents a demon with arms and legs manacled. On either side of the figures is an enclosed space, that on the figure's right hand bearing the inscription אסורא, that on its left, רשוא, i. e. prohibition and permission. In the lower part of the body on the former side is inscribed the names of the sorcerer's client. The pictures thus graphically presents the idea that the demon has no power over the lady in question. The picture is of better quality than the inscription, which is very illiterate. The spelling is most careless.

1. The connection of the proper names is uncertain, as also the character of the names themselves. For הרמסדר I might compare the Pahlavi Ormazdyâr, Justi, p. 10a.

2. For the repeated א, see p. 60.

3. סטנא, טלנא, שירנא. probably an artificial form; cf. לטאנא.

4. מִיחֻחָא has Mandaic fem. pl. ending.—In בִּאֲלִיָּא the first א has a point over it—to mark error? cf. the Massoretic Nikkudim.

5. רוּפִיאַל : the first vowel as in Enoch and in Mandaic, representing the Hebrew active ppl., parallel to the equivalent Aramaic form in Raphael.

חֶלְלִיָּהּ : for similar perversions see 24: 4, 31: 8, 32: 12; cf. ἀλλήλων in the Paris Magical Papyrus, l. 3032, and חֶלְלוּ לֵיהּ in a Jewish charm, JAOS, 1911, 274.

COMMENTARY

Three identical bowls, out of the four which were deposited at the corners of the charmed house; see § 8. There are slight variations in the inscriptions; in No. 22 the writer found more room and made a longer inscription. All three are most roughly and illegibly written; the characters ܝ, ܢ, ܠ, ܝ are indistinguishable, and ܡ has a peculiar form. The word transliterated ܠܝܢ, 22: 5, is written in a clumsy Syriac script.

An interesting grammatical peculiarity is the omission of ܝ after a genitive with the personal suffix. This appears at the beginning of l. 3 in No. 22, and throughout, in the same combination, in the other two. This might be taken for haplography before ܠܝܢ; but the same phenomenon appears in the Mandaic bowls published below; see the Introduction, § 5 B.

For the injunction in l. 4 not to approach, cf. the like prohibition in a late Greek charm (Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 294): τοῦ μὴ ἄδυκεσαι ἢ βλάψαι ἢ προσεγγίσειαι, κ. τ. λ.; cf. also a Syriac charm of Gollancz's, p. 93.

COMMENTARY

A charm for three daughters of a certain woman, made out in their names severally and for specific maladies. The misspellings are numerous.

1. הנרייה: the same name appears in 40: 14; it is hypocoristic of הנרייה
38: 3, i. e. "Indian woman."

2. אשיתא is doubtless fever, in neo-Syriac = malarial fever, cf. the general name for fever with the Jews, אשיתא (Preuss, Bib.-talm. Med., 184). and n. b. the disease ašû in Assyrian, Küchler, Beiträge, 131, 197. For the next word the root אסא suggests a sweating disease. אונא may be another kind of fever. In general see above, p. 93 f.

3. 𐤏𐤍𐤐: also in Hyvernat's bowl. The name occurs as that of an Egyptian sorceress in a Syriac biography of Rabban Hormizd (c. 600), cited by Budge in his edition of The Book of Governors, i, p. clxiv. Our word is probably the Syriac ܚܳܐܳܩܳܐ, "pelican," while the Egyptian name may represent 𐎕𐎎𐎗 (for a similar adoption of this Greek word, see Payne Smith, col. 3709).

4. For the "disturbing dreams," see p. 82.

5. Zarinkaš: cited by Justi, p. 382.

COMMENTARY

The inscription is of interest because it is directed against the apparition of family ghosts. In this respect it is to be compared with No. 39 and Wohlstein's bowl, no. 2417; see above p. 82.

1. גורר: identified by Justi, p. 356, as a new-Persian form of Warôê. The Seder ha-Doroth lists a number of Talmudic persons named גוריא and גוריון (ii, 89); also a famous Syriac martyr Gurias is recorded. Apart from the Persian hypocoristic ending, the word could be explained from the Semitic (גוריא, Syriac, "whelp"). Cf. also the Palmyrene גורא, Lidzbarski, Handbuch, 249.

טאטי: Taṭā is a feminine name found in Syriac, in Asseman's Bibliotheca Orientalis and Wright's Catalogue of the British Museum; see Payne Smith, col. 1456. Cf. חאחא, 39: 8.

2. איל, אילי, and אילה 1. 5: the Aramaic pronoun with loss of י, cf. similar cases cited to 8: 2,—if not a Hebraism.

ניסחרתו, ניסחרתו: Hebrew Nifals with Aramaic inflection.

שלא לחום להרברו: the idea apparently is that a message be sent to the dead to cause them to cease their contentions (ריביהון) with the living, then one of these departed spirits is named. The name is not recognizable as a proper name, and evidently, as in Wohlstein's bowl, referred to above, it is a fancy name. (There we have such names as Yodid, Muth, Dabti, Ith.)

4. יופאל: One of the six angels in Targ. Jer. to Dt. 34: 6, along with Metatron, and, in Schwab, Vocab., 145, a companion of M. and prince of the Law. יופי is a Talmudic surrogate for יהוה, see Blau, Zauberwesen, 131.

יהואל or יחואל: cf. יהואל, Schwab, p. 141. The following name is unknown. These angels are invoked as phases or names of Deity; cf. p. 58.

Hermes-Metatron: for the identification, see to 2: 2; here identified with Yah.

5. These magical words are mystical names of the angels; see p. 97. They are dominated by sibilant terminations for which see p. 60.

מלאכיה: Mandaic plural spelling.

יאתון = יתון.

7. גילל עלם: cf. Syriac שנא, זבנא, גיגל זבנא; also of a cycle.

COMMENTARY

This charm, against the evil Lilith, is introduced by three quotations from the Scriptures. The first is the opening sentence of the Shemâ, which still remains the contents of the Mezuzoth, or house phylacteries of the Jews. The other two have occurred in previous texts; see 5: 5. Unfortunately the last two lines are too broken and obscure to be read. I have merely reproduced here the evident characters. In the segments of the circle at the bottom of the bowl appear words, some of which are forms of the divine Names יה, יהו, איה, איהו; also אילור (?) and איהו (?)

1. יהו: for יהוה. Cf. the common scribal abbreviation, י or יי; also such forms as ייו and ייי, in Schwab O.

יהו: for ביר, as in No. 5.

3. חוב: cf. 2: 1.

4. בריכיהיה: there is no doubt as to the reading of this name and it is remarkable enough. The second and divine component of the name—which was an ordinary ברכי[יה], ברכי[יה], or ברכי[יה], has been expanded so as to give the awful pronunciation of the Ineffable Name. We cannot suppose that the name was thus ordinarily spelt or pronounced, but the scribe has taken it upon himself to give this interpretation (פירוש) of his client's name. Here then is a clear survival of the ancient magical signification and use of the personal name (cf. Heitmüller, "Im Namen Jesu," 159 ff.); as also of the pronunciation of the name itself. It may be retorted that יה—would hardly be used to represent ê, and that the original pronunciation was Yahwê, not—ê (see Arnold's valuable discussion, JBL, xxiv, 152). The latter thesis is right, but I think that the tradition represented here connects with the Hellenistic magic, in which, among various forms, Iao occurs several times (Deissmann, Bibelstudien, 7),¹ although I have not found a case of Iaβη. Further, in the Talmud (Sanh. 56a) יוסה appears as a surrogate for the Name, which Dietrich, ZATW, iv, 27, would vocalize as Yosê. Blau (Zauberwesen, 131) objects to ê, but adduces from the Mishna, Sukk. 45a, the surrogate יופי which he identifies with the Greek magical term ιουφω (citing Paris Pap. II. 1896, 2746). This would be further proof for η in the current magical pronunciation. As for יה = -ê, we have not only the masc. pron. suffix for a parallel but also the plural -ê represented in the same way in some of our texts, e. g. 9: 6, 12: 1, 25: 5, and also the proper name דרביה 31: 2.

¹ Also on an Abraxas gem, see Dict. de l'archéologie chrétienne, i, 141.

I can find no other interpretation of this unique name-form. A note upon it was published in the Museum Journal of the University, 1910 no. 2, which called forth some private criticisms from scholars (along with assents), but no better explanation has been offered. (Is there a possible explanation in the יהביה noticed to 7: 8?). In the first amulet in my paper "Some Early Amulets from Palestine," JAOS, 1911, 272, line 16, יהביה is apparently to be read for the divine Name, a proof of western connections for the present form.

איצפנדרמיך: cf. Glossary B for other forms. The name occurs in Ellis 1, where it was first recognized by Levy, ZDMG, ix, 470, 486, its correct interpretation (as Spenta-Armaita, a daughter of Ahuramazda) being given by G. Hoffmann, "Auszüge aus syrischen Acten," Abhandlungen f. d. Kunde d. Morgenlandes, 1880, 128; see also Justi, p. 308. For the mother's name Prof. Kent suggests to me comparison with Ἐπειδωρος, see Fick, Griech. Personennamen, 112.

8. פשיטנא: cf. 2: 5.

COMMENTARY

After the introductory appeal, "In thy name, O Lord of salvations," etc., the inscription for lines 2b-11 is practically identical with No. 2. This portion does not need translation and commentary. The remaining lines, 13-24, are so mutilated or obscure, that I can make out but few connected passages in them, and hence I do not present them.

There are a few slight differences between the parallel texts, this one being probably more correct. The most considerable variation in text is in l. 9, where the sorcerer says that he laid the ban upon Hermon; cf. my note to 2: 6. The same Yezidād bar Izdandūch and his wife Merdūch bath Banāi, appear in No. 7. There they are the subjects of the charm, here Yezidād operates magic in his own name. Cf. the mutual character of the charm in No. 2. In l. 8 the wife also takes up the exorcism.

COMMENTARY

A love-charm—such is the import of this sadly mutilated but interesting bowl. It belongs to the same class of magic as No. 13, but is more romantic, for there we find a charm for a childless, neglected wife, here one for a passionate woman to bring her lover to her side. For the use of a bowl for such a defixio see above p. 44. The first copyist was able to read more than I can now, as, since it was in his hands, the bowl has been cracked and then repaired. The lacunae in the text are tantalizing.

So far as the text is legible, the charm which names the two parties adjures the passion of the beloved. Some praxis is described, a simulacrum is evidently used, for "his heart is to be torn in pieces," and on this image is to be scattered some kind of salad of hot herbs expressive of love's passion, while the beloved's name is to be formally pronounced.

Blau has collected the Talmudic material on philtres in his Zauberwesen, 24, 52, 158, 167; n. b. the recitation of Bible verses over the love-apple, p. 52, n. 2 (with literature). In the Old Testament we have mere references to this aphrodisiac (Gen. 30: 14 ff., Cant. 7: 14) without any note as to magical manipulation. For later Jewish use, see the numerous philtres prescribed in Thompson, "Folk Lore of Mossoul," PSBA, 1906-7.

But it is from the classical and Hellenistic field that we have most knowledge of this amatory magic, and the connections of the present text are found in that direction. Of course Theocritus's second Idyll comes to mind, in which the love-lorn maiden casts the various philtres into the fire with adjurations of Hecate. For this classical field I may refer to the monograph of O. Hirschfeld, De incantamentis et devinctionibus amatoris apud Graecos Romanosque (Ratisbon, 1863); see p. 42 for aphrodisiac herbs; also see section 8 (p. 233) of Abt, Die Apologie des Apuleius.

In the magical papyri numerous erotic incantations are preserved, e. g. in the Paris Papyrus in Wessely, Vienna Denkschriften hist.-phil. Class, xxxvi, l. 2622 ff., xli, p. 52, l. 976 ff.¹ But the most graceful and famous of these charms is that inscribed on a lead plate found at Hadrumetum, N. Africa,—buried in a necropolis, just as our bowl was buried in the earth. First edited by Maspero, it has been since frequently published: Wünsch, CIA, App. continens defixionum tabellas, p. xvii; Audollent, Defixionum tabellae, no. 271; Deissmann, Bibelstudien, 21, and Bible Studies, 271; Blau, op. cit. 96; Wünsch, Ant. Fluchtafeln, no. 5. It is Blau's merit to have specially pointed out the Jewish connection of this text. Now, between this Hellenistic charm and our bowl we find an almost literal correspondence in the trinity of terms for the passion adjured in the lover. With our invocation that the man "be enflamed and kindled and burn after" the girl, compare the longing of the Greek maiden Domitiana that her lover come ἐρῶντα μαινόμενον βασανιζόμενον, or ἐρῶντα μαινόμενον βασανιζόμενον, or ἐρ. βασ. ἀγρυπνῶντα —repetitions like those in our texts. With this probably technical formula compare the second of the charms cited above by Wesley: May X do naught until ἐλθοῖσα πρὸς με τὸν δαίνα πληροφοροῦσα ἀγαπᾶσαι στεργοῦσα ἐμέ, κ. τ. λ. Also in our I. 4 there is an echo of Domitiana's wish that he come ἐν τῇ φιλῇ καὶ ἐρωτὶ καὶ ἐπεθυμία, while the formula "to the name," I. 1, and the use of "heart," I. 2, indicate Greek connections.

How much Jewish, how much Grecian, the Hadrumetum tablet is, it is difficult to determine. Our text shows manifest ties with the love-magic of the Hellenistic world and is the eastern representative of the philtres of which the North African text is the most notable western example. The spirit of both these texts is Greek rather than Semitic; but the fame of Jewish magic appears to have made its solemn formulas eligible for the desires of passion. Our text, it is to be noticed, is not at all Jewish in religion, is of more simple original type than the African charm.

For the praxis of our text I may compare a Moorish love-charm cited by Doutté, Magie et religion dans l'Afrique du Nord, Algiers, 1908, p. 253: "A woman who wishes to gain the love of a man should procure the following materials from neighbors with whom she has never eaten: coriander, caraway, gum of terebinth, lime, cummin, verdegis, myrrh, some blood of an animal whose throat has been cut, and a piece of a broom hailing from a cemetery. On a dark night she is to go into the country with a lighted brazier and throw these different articles one after another into the fire speaking these words: O coriander, bring him mad! O caraway, bring him wandering without success! O mastic, raise in his heart anguish and tears! O white lime, make his heart wakeful in disquietude! O cummin, bring him possessed! O verdegis, kindle the fire of his heart! O myrrh, make him spend a frightful night! O blood of the victim, lead him panting! O cemetery broom, bring him to my side." Etc.

יִשְׁמִיָּה = εἰς τὸ ὄνομα, and see Heitmüller, "Im Namen Jesu," 95 ff., and his definition of the phrase as indicating "die Zueignung an eine Person

2. כבש עלמא: I translate the words without any certain sense. For the noun כ' see to 7: 1. If עלמא might be read, the reference could be to a moulded (כבש, "press") figure representing the lover. Below in l. 4 the space before the man's name may have contained "image of," or the like. The latter part of the line is most obscure. The "heart" (also l. 5) appears as the seat of sexual affection. This is a Greek usage, not Semitic (with the possible exception of the Hebrew phrase דבר על לב, used five times with a woman as the object). See Andry, Le coeur, 5, for the Greek idea of the heart as the amatory organ, p. 15 ff., for the late Semitic use. P. 17 he quotes a Spanish Arabic poet who speaks gallantly of being wounded to the heart, but the metaphor is that of a mortal wound.²

3. I translate the ppl. נסבין, as also פסקין l. 5, as imperatives; cf. Rabbinic and Syriac usage.

י-א נוריא: to this list of aphrodisiacs the clue is given by נוריא (י-א = pl. ending, as in Mandaic), which is the piper candidus (Payne Smith, col. 2303); its pungency was evidently regarded as possessing erotic power and symbolism. Then חרר, if the reading be correct, and אחרוניתא are to be explained in the same way from their roots, חרר, חרה, "burn." ענני שימשא doubtless lies in the same circle of ideas. May מללן be mushrooms? Loew's Aramäische Pflanzennamen does not contain these words. The "rites of love" are the magical practices.

4. שחאה: I compare Syriac שחאות (sub שח). "boldness, lasciviousness"; the ending ā for ayā?

5. פסקין טין ליביה. פ' a noun, or better a ppl. like נסבין, l. 3. The phrase is simplest interpreted as a reference to the lady's slowly tearing to pieces the facsimile of her lover's heart, with the intent that he perish of love; cf. again Theocritus's second Idyll.

² Cf. the phrase quoted in Lane's Dictionary, 782: "she has overturned my heart and torn my midriff."

דליבח: one of the Mandaic forms of Dilbat, a name of the Babylonian Ishtar, especially in her stellar capacity as Venus. For the Mandaic forms, see Brandt, Mand. Schr., 45, 85; also in Hesychius as Δελεφατ, and in Bar Bahlul as דלבת.² For this form, see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram. § 25. For the Babylonian use see Jensen, Kosmologie, 18, and the latest discussion by Jastrow, ZA, 1908, 155. As the goddess of love her patronage is appropriate. The epithet עזיזתא (cf. 38: 7) recalls the Babylonian czzu, a frequent epithet of gods, while Ishtar especially appears as the raging goddess, whether of war, in Assyria, or of love, in the Izdubhar epic. The same epithet became the old Arabian name of the morning-star, al-'uzza, (Wellhausen Skizzen, 111, 41, Nöldeke, ZDMG, xli, 710, the identification denied by W. R. Smith, Rel. Sem., 57). The Edessene עזי was originally the morning-star, Lagrange, Études,² 135; cf. the Aramaic names עשתרתען (Lidzbarski, Handbuch, 347 f.).

COMMENTARY

A charm made out for two different parties, (1) a woman Metānīš and her household, and (2) for several men and their house and quarters. These may be lodgers in the woman's house. One of the men is a "foreigner." The tone of piety in the charm is superior to that of the other texts; the incantation is in the name of YHWH Sebaoth alone, whose praises are dwelt upon in almost liturgical fashion.

1. The charm appears to have a double introduction. Most of ll. 3, 4 is unintelligible.

5. ראשנא: possibly the father's name, Syriac ראשנא, "prince." One is tempted to compare the name of the famous Roxane; the masc. parallel Roxanes = Persian Rōšan, Justi, p. 262. But the ō should be indicated.

6. וכשירה: לִי בִי see above, p. 76. כִי may be euphemistic and then have developed into a distinct species. Cf. the epithet טאבא in l. 9.

7. כיפסא: Syriac kepsā.—בנתא דברא: cf. 17: 3.—טומ: Syriac טאומא.

בר נפלא: one might think, in the context, of abortion. But in the Talmud בר נפליה is a demon of nervous trouble or epilepsy, Bekor. 44b; see Grünbaum ZDMG, xxxi, 332 for some discussion of the word. Epilepsy was a most common disease in antiquity; n. b. the miracles in the New Testament, and for the Hellenic world cf. Tambornino, De antiquorum daemonismo, 57: often equivalent to insanity. It has been generally supposed that the Jews were particularly subject to this disease; M. Fishberg in The Jews, London and New York, 1911, denies this, but admits the nervous pathology of the race (chap. xv). Cf. 16: 8 for another disease cited in Bekor. 44.

8. דררחא: alongside of דרר, l. 6; the form appears in the Syriac and Mandaic bowls.

חליפא = Palmyrene חליש; for signification, cf. מחלפא.

שישן: cf. the Persian (?) names Sisines, Sisinnios, Šišōi, Justi, p. 303; on the etymology of Sisines see Nöldeke, Pers. Studien, 404, no. 1.

Cf. the Jewish names שישנא and שישנא, Seder ha-Doroth, ii, 348 f. Also in Pognon B (where שנשין it is the name of the parent—mother or father? Is שרדא an additional name? Of רשי we learn only that he is a foreigner. Also אמטרוכא is evidently a Greek name.

9. ננעי בני אדם: the demon offspring of Adam are called בני אדם in the Zohar, Eisenmenger, ii, 422.

The lacuna at end of the line is supplied by help of 14: 6.

10. For the dominance of sibilants in these magical words cf. p. 60. At the beginning and end of the series are characters enclosed in square lines.

11. בי: for בין, as also in the Talmud. There follows a lapse into Hebrew—probably a citation.

שחקים: one of the seven heavens of Kabbalism.

12. תושבחתיה: תושבחתיה?

A charm for two men and a woman from certain specified diseases and demons. The inscription is illiterate and the script particularly difficult, the writer using a very individual chirography; n. b. the \mathfrak{m} , the non-distinction of \mathfrak{v} and \mathfrak{r} , the \mathfrak{s} which often consists of but two upright strokes, and the use of one form for internal and final \mathfrak{n} except in the word $\mathfrak{m}\mathfrak{n}$, where a final is used.

1. אסר. for אסיר.

אישפזא: cf. the Syriac אשפז (Ašpāz) for the Hebrew אשפזן in Dan.
 1: 3. אספזן occurs in Myhrman, l. 1, to which I cite the Babylonian

Ašpazanda.). The Persian אִשְׁפָּזַנְדָּא is "house," and אִשְׁפָּזִיכָּא "steward." May it be an abbreviated form of the latter word?²

אֶרְחָא: cf. the biblical אֶרֶח, a post-exilic name.

2. סִימְכִי: the characters are uncertain. Cf. Σιμικος in a Greek inscription from the Don, = Persian simikos, "silver"; Justi, p. 294.

שָׁמַיִשׁ וְכִיטָא: the first word is the Mandaic spelling for "the Sun," which also in the Mandaic religion is regarded as an evil genius. כִּיטָא = קִיטָא, see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 42. Cf. Ps. 121: 6, 91: 6, and see Grünbaum's discussion of the קֶטֶב מִרְיִי, the demon of the midday sun, ZDMG, xaxi, 251 f.

רִכְרִיא: an error for רִיכְרִיא (cf. 1. 3), or intended for assonance with נִקְיִחָא. Cf. the unabashed spellings in Samaritan literature to produce rhymes. Or is there a play on the roots, רִכְר and נִקְב being used in the sense of "name"?—i. e. the named spirits.

3. רִיחַ לִילִיתָא: cf. N. T. πνεῦμα δαίμονος.

עֵינָאנָא: the last two letters are dittography. There follows a list of various kinds of "evil eye," for which see p. 86.

4. עֵינָא חֶאסְרִינִתָא: so the most likely reading; cf. Lidz. 4, end, עֵינָא חֶאסְרִינִתָא (?).

"The eye that sees (or of those that see) within the heart" is a reference to the uncanny effect of the evil eye.

In what follows some corrections are necessary. חֵיל = דְּחו?; for חֵיל בִּישֵׁן read חֵיל בִּישׁ as farther on, and correct וְזִנְתָא to וְזִנְתָא with 1. 5. There is evidently a repetition of phrases. The חֵיל בִּישׁ (like the עֵין בִּישָׁא) is the personification of the power operating these psychological wonders. Cf. the Rabbinic כִּחַת (Joel, Der Aberglaube, i, 80), the New Testament δυνάμεις.

At the end of 1. 5 comes a long series of characters which do not appear to form words.

² According to Karmsedin's Lexicon, quoted by Payne-Smith under the latter word; in lingua Nabathaea est oecononius et viatorum exceptor, etc. Observe the accompanying name אֶרְחָא.

COMMENTARY

Nos. 32 and 33 contain practically identical inscriptions, except that they are made out in the name of different clients, and that No. 32 has additional matter at the beginning and the end. This identity is fortunate for the interpretation of the two bowls, for the lacunae in each one can be almost wholly supplied from the other. Also No. 35 is made out for the wife of the client of the present charm. The chirography of all three bowls is the same, being more cursive than the script of No. 31.

The charms effected in this and the following bowl are attributed to a certain master magician, Jesus bar Peraḥia, evidently the Joshua ben Peraḥia, who appears in the same capacity in Nos. 8, 9, and 17. Now Joshua ben Peraḥia is one of the several Zugoth or Pairs, who handed down the tradition of the Law from the Great Synagogue; and he flourished in the reign of Alexander Jannaeus, in the early part of the first century B. C. The Mishnaic reference to him is found in Pirḳe Aboth 1: 7, where the following dictum is attributed to him: "Make unto thyself a master, and possess thyself of an associate, and judge every man on the scale of merit."

Further, an interesting Talmudic tradition concerning the same Joshua appears in uncensored editions, according to which he fled into Egypt to escape the cruel persecution instituted by Alexander against the Pharisees, culminating in the crucifixion of eight hundred of that faction, circa 88

B. C.¹ The tradition is of added interest because it connects Joshua with a certain ישׁ whose identity with Jesus of Nazareth is generally recognized.²

The passage in Sanh. 107b reads as follows: The rabbis taught: The left hand should always push away, and the right hand receive favorably. Not like Elisha, who drove away Gehazi with both hands, nor like Joshua b. P. who drove off Jesus (in the Munich MS., and in Sofa ישו הנצרי, i. e. Jesus the Nazarene). . . . How was that? When king Jannaeus killed the rabbis, R. Joshua b. P. and Jesus went to Alexandria of Egypt. When peace was established, Simeon b. Šetaḥ sent a message to him: From Jerusalem the Holy City to thee Alexandria of Egypt, my sister: My husband is lodged in thee, and I sit desolate.—He (Joshua) arose, and came, and lodged at a certain inn, where they paid him great respect. He said: How fair is this inn (aksania). He (Jesus) said to him, Rabbi, her eyes (as though by aksania the landlady was meant!) are too bleary. He replied to him: Thou knave, thou busiest thyself with such stuff! He brought forth four hundred horns and excommunicated him. He (Jesus) came in his presence many a time, and said, Receive me; he took no notice of him. One day he was reading the Shema, Jesus again presented himself, thinking he would receive him. He made a sign to him with his hand, he thought that he had utterly rejected him. He went off and erected a tile and worshipped it. Joshua said to him, Repent. He replied, I have been taught by thee that every sinner and seducer of the people can find no opportunity for repentance. And so it was said: Jesus bewitched and seduced and drove off Israel.

It is of interest that the Jesus of our texts is given a title which became the epithet of the Nazarene Jesus with whom Talmudic tradition connected him: ישוע נאצי, 34: 2, = Ἰησοῦς ναζωρή. Is there in this magical reference to Jesus b. Peraḥia a confusion with Jesus Christ?

We find then in these magical bowls an independent tradition concerning an early hero of the Law, who appears as endowed with magic powers, and who furthermore was able to make the ascent of the soul to heaven. He was accordingly one of the earliest to attain that spiritual privilege, which was the claim of apocalyptists from the author of Enoch down. See in general Bousset, "Die Himmelfahrt d. Seele," in Archiv f. Rel.-wissenschaft, iv (1901), 136 f., 229 f. Such a claim is made for Akiba, who alone of four friends succeeded in penetrating Paradise, Hagiga 14b (see Bousset, p. 145), and this mystical claim was asserted by the Kabbalists for Moses and especially for R. Ishmael; see full references in Bousset, p. 151 ff., cf. Graetz, Gesch. v, 231 and Joel, Aberglaube, ii, 35. The Talmudic tradition has unfortunately not preserved for us enough of the mystical side of the early teachers; Akiba could not have been alone in his mysticism. Joshua was possibly one of the good company of apocalyptists and our magic tradition may preserve a true reminiscence of his personality and claims.

² The anecdote is found in Sanhedrin 107b = Sofa 47a; cf. Jerusalem Talmud Hagiga, ii, 2, Sanh. vi, 8. Dalman, in Laible's *Jesus Christus im Talmud*², Appendix, p. 8 ff., gives the texts of the first three passages, with critical apparatus, and Strack, Jesus, die Häretiker u. d. Christen, 1910, § 8, gives the texts from Hagiga, and the Bab. Sanhedrin. Through the kindness of Dr. Julius H. Greenstone, I have also had access to his rare copy of the Constantinople edition, 1585, of Sanhedrin. Dalman quotes the Venetian editions of the two Talmuds, and the Jewish Encyclopaedia, s. v. "Joshua b. P." cites the Amsterdam and Berlin edition of 1865 for the passage in Sofa. On the criticism of the legend concerning Jesus, see Laible, p. 40 ff., and Strack, ad loc. The Jerusalem Talmud names Juda b. Tabai in place of Joshua (they were contemporaries) and omits mention of Jesus. Cf. Blau, p. 34, for some points of interpretation. The introduction of Jesus is a sheer anachronism.

2. בנה: plural with masc. sing. suffix, as in the texts above and in Mandaic.

דינו: s. Nöldeke, Persische Studien, 403.

3. פורא רמינא ו': see to 9: 1. I may now add the Syriac פורא, "earthenware figures" (of the gods), occurring in Overbeck, Ephraemi Syri ... opera, 13, l. 24. Compare also the Assyrian pûru, "bowl," see Zimmern, Beiträge, 147, note k, and KAT, 518: but my etymology contravenes that of Zimmern.

הווא: a duplicated form of the pronoun, found in the Syriac.

4. כי: a preposition appearing in the Rabbinic dialect, not in Syriac.

דסתבורא: Prof. Roland G. Kent, to whom I referred this word, has published an elaborate study of it in JAOS, 1911, 359. He comes to the conclusion that it means "a handwritten deterrent," from dast, "hand" + bhira (Sansk.), "terrifying." The word occurs only here and in No. 33.

5. לטבא: see to 9: 7.

6. The same magical reference appears in No. 32. For the practice see the more perfect form in 9: 6.

הנהון : a unique spelling (occurring also in the parallel, No. 33, along with הנון), for the Syriac hemôn. It is an elder form and is to be compared with the Rabbinic אינוהו, see Levias, Grammar, § 95.

7. איתמר : corresponding to both Syriac and Rabbinic forms.

איתמר : from a denominative verb, arising from the root אסר. Payne-Smith, col. 2181, gives a citation for מַסַּר, = vinxit catenis vel compedibus, with which may be compared מַסְרֵנוּתָא, actus ligationis, ib. col. 324. Also cf. מַסַּר, Glossary C.

8. חבילא : also found in 37: 11 and in Lidzbarski, Mand. Amulet, l. 33 (de Vogüé volume).

לִאֲפִסְכֹּן : for the infinitive, cf. 9: 8.

איכין = Syriac aikannâ; the good Syriac אִיךְ appears in the parallel 34: 4. What follows is not perfectly clear. By the "ancient songs" (שִׁירָא rare in Syriac), are meant charms (i. e. carmina), such as the master Jesus b. P. once used. But the following clause remains obscure because of the unintelligible דַּעֲוֵטָר.

10. אַנְשָׁא : cf. the Rabbinic אינשי, which Nöldeke (Mand. Gram., 182) understands as ênâšê, not inšê. The Syriac rarely uses the plural in the sense of "men."

TRANSLATION

This bowl is designated for the sealing of the house of Mihr-hormizd bar Mami (2) by power of the virtue of Jesus the healer, by the virtue of my mighty relative. Charmed is the dwelling, and the abode (3) and the house and the wife and the sons and the daughters of Mihr-hormizd, who is surnamed b. M.; charmed and sealed (4) even as Moses commanded the Red Sea and they (the waters) stood up like a wall on both sides.
 Charmed and sealed, charmed and sealed, (5) by this word which God laid upon the earth and the trees which... their tops; charmed and sealed with the seal of the mountains and heights; (6) charmed and sealed (with the spell which is) in the heavens and the earth, the sun and the moon, the stars and (zodiacal) signs, and by the word they are charmed and remain in ward. In the name of (7) Michael the healer and Rofiel the reliever, and Gabriel the servant of the Lord.

Charmed and sealed is all evil that is in the body of Mihr-hormizd b. M. (8) and in his house (and) his wife and his sons and his daughters and his cattle and his property and in all his dwelling, by the signet of Ariôn son of Zand and by the seal of King Solomon son of David, (9) by which were sealed the Oppressors and the Laṭbê. And we have sealed with the seal of El Šaddai and Abraxas the mighty lord, and the great seal with which were sealed heaven and earth and all Demons (10) and foul Knots and Laṭbê, which contend against him. And a seal is this against Harm and Constraint (?), that they shall not at all enter in. And every Damkar and Šaiṭ and Šarā are charmed by the spell of (11) fire and the enchainment of water until the dissolution of heaven and earth. Amen, Amen, Selah. Sealed and guarded be the house and wife and sons and property and body of Mihr-hormizd (12) b. M., and depart from him the Injurer and evil Dreams and the Curse and the Vow and Arts and the Tormentor and Damages and Losses and Failures and Poverty.

And sealed and protected be Bahrōi bath Bath-Sāhdê from the Tormentor and evil Dreams and the Curse and the Vow and Arts and Practices. And charmed be the Tormentor and Lilith and Ban-spirit, who thwarts her in her hand and foot, and may it not approach nor afflict this Bahrōi b. B.

COMMENTARY

The text is of the same order as those immediately preceding. At the end the charm is operated for a woman (with a Christian name), presumably the wife of the chief client of the text.

1. חתומין: the reading is certain, and the word is parallel to חתמתא in the previous inscriptions, but the formation is unique, if it be not an error; חתומי would be a Pael inf.

A Hormizd son of Māmā(i) appears in No. 15.

מיתר חורמזיר is the same as Mitr-ḥarmazde, or Mihrhormuz, the name of the murderer of Chosroes II; see Justi, p. 216.

2. אסיא: here applied to the sorcerer, but otherwise of God, e. g. 3: 1, or angels, e. g. Michael, 1. 7. See introduction to notes on No. 32.

אחיני (evidently so written) I take to be for אחיני, "my cousin." The magical tradition was handed down in the sorcerer's family, cf. 8: 11.

4. מושה: a point over א, also in the same name in 35: 6—diacritical for ê?

The charm is the effective one used by Moses at the Red Sea, cf. Ex. 14: 22. See p. 64 for the magical use of such episodes. But the plural קטן is a reminiscence of Josh. 3: 16, and indicates conflation of the two narratives. מן תרזיהן ניסין appears to be a confusion for תרזיהן ניסין. תרזי is Palmyrene and Rabbinic, not Edessene, but is found in neo-Syriac, Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 153.

5. אשכבה: of laying a spell; the same verb for laying a ghost, 16: 11. The Afel is a hebraism. Compare Is. 9: 7: "a word Yahwe has sent in Jacob, and it has fallen in Israel"; i. e. the magical word itself is potent.

אילנא: the reference of the noun is obscure as is also the meaning of the following verb. There may be a reference to some myth concerning ancient "big" trees; cf. Isaia's denunciation of "everything high and lifted up," 2: 5 ff., and especially his woe upon the cedars of Lebanon and the אלני הבשן, v. 13. Then v. 14 is parallel to the מורא ורמאתא of 1. 5. The following relative clause is almost unintelligible. The root ריע is found only in Arabic, = "withhold, refuse." The next word I identify with the Biblical אמיר, Is. 17: 6 (possibly, with some critics, also in Gen. 49: 21). The old tree-myth may have told how the trees flaunted their high tops against the gods. The obscurity of the passage may be due to corruption of the form of the legend. The ' of אמיריהן appears to be used as one of the Seyâmê points.

6. אסירין: n. b. position of the points.

בפוקדנא: a reference to the myth of the restraint of the celestial powers; see the discussion on 4: 5, and cf. Is. 24: 21.

7. סרוליה: a unique epithet for Raphael. It is a pau'el formation from רלל, and, agreeably to the etymology of Raphael and parallel to the epithet applied to Gabriel, the participle is used in the sense "to relieve," sc. the sick. Cf. Baba Bathra 16 b, אידלי יומא אידלי קצירא, "when the day is high, the sick man is relieved." In the Syriac the Pael came to be used in the sense of "saving," see Payne-Smith, col. 903.

גבראיל עברא דא: Gabriel is especially the messenger of Deity; cf. Luke 1, and Rev. 19: 10, where the angel who calls himself στυλιος with the apocalypticist may be Gabriel.

8. Mandaic form. Several phylacteries for cattle are given in Pradel's collection of Graeco-Italian charms; e. g. p. 18 and references, pp. 125, 127. An exorcism against the "seven accursed brothers" (the Babylonian Seven) who attack and devour the blood of the cattle, is given in Gollancz's Syriac charms, p. 87. According to the Babylonian magic the Seven Spirits "smite both oxen and sheep" (Thompson, Sem. Magic, i, 33). The mediaeval belief in the 'hexing' of cattle still flourishes among the Pennsylvania Germans.

אריין בר ונר: this sorcerer's name appears also in No. 19: 13, 17, and the two passages help mutually to identify the words.

9. עשמה: a new species of demons, "the oppressors," ppl. of a common Syriac root.

10. עיקרא (or פ' ?): "Knots," i. e. of magical power. The word corresponds to the Arabic 'uḡdat.

מביא: has usurped the radical א; cf. Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., § 33 b.

מתעין: Etpa. of עא, probably metaplastic for עו.

אבערין: for the prosthetic vowel see Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., § 51, Mand. Gram., § 24 (n. b. the equivalence of לאב' ו' על ק', as in Mandaic). The word may mean ugliness or some more specific malady. Cf. the charms in the Greek magical papyri for obtaining good looks.

The parallel קמחא must also mean some kind of malady, and may be identified with the Assyrian kamtu, "misery" (Muss-Arnolt, Dict. 366), which is to be connected with the Hebrew and Aramaic root קמט, "compress" (with dissimilation of the dental); probably some form of contortion.

עלל : the first word is evidently an absolute infinitive from עלל, plus â (= me'êlâ = me'lâ, cf. the noun ma'lâ). For this formation with final â, Nöldeke offers a Mandaic instance, Mand. Gram., 250, last line, מיקמא. In the form עללן (if ' is to be read) doubling of the second radical appears; cf. the Mandaic form עללן, cited by Nöldeke, ibid., 249, ad infra.

ושט דמקר ושיט ושרא : all three words are obscure. The second may be the שט of the Krê to Is. 28: 15, = שוט, "scourge." The third may be the שרא Rabbinic, "prince, demon"; or the Hebrew šêrah (also Aramaic) "chain, necklace," cf. the magical ענקתא. But diseases are apparently intended (cf. אבערון above), and we may identify שט with the Syriac Sâiṭâ, "eye-tumor" (Payne-Smith, col. 4094), and שרא with the Syriac שריא (ib., 4316), "diarrhoea." דמקר may then be understood as a formation from נקר, "pierce," of tafal form, —tanḵar = tamḵar (cf. Delitzsch, Ass. Gram., § 59), = damḵar. With the root meaning of perforation, cancer or the like may be referred to. The absolute forms are used, as proper names.

11. אסור נורא וכשישלן מיא : fire and water are potent over demons. שישלן is a collective form in -ân. Cf. the catenis igneis in Wünsch, Ant. Fluchttafeln, no. 7.

ועדמא למשרא וי : the demons are to be bound till the end of the present aeon; then will begin a new order, which will include the final destruction of their power; cf. 2 Pet. 3: 12: οὐρανὸς καὶ γῆ ἐρριπείσονται; also Enoch.

12. זינא : "loss"; see Jastrow, p. 393, Payne-Smith, col. 1118. For the personification of all kinds of losses, see p. 94.

בהורי : hypocoristicon of Bahram? See Nöldeke, Pers. Stud., 387 ff., Justi, 361 ff.

בת סחרא : "Daughter-of-the-Martyrs," a Christian name, cf. Bar-S., in Asseman, Bibl. Or., ii, 403 (Payne-Smith, col. 2536), a bishop of Nineve. Cf. the proper names, "Son-of-Carpenters," "Son-of-Ironsmiths," ib. 591, 596.

13. מישמחתא וי : epithets of the Lilit, who is also the Witch, who can "bind" the limbs of her victim; see No. 42 and p. 78. Superior points for the feminine suffix are used here as also in No. 35.

14. תחיתר : switchings by demons are a common theme of magic, see 1: 10; compare the Christian hagiological legends.

And guarded be the house and wife and son and property of Dinôî son of Ispandarmêd from the Tormentor and evil Dreams and the Curse and the Vow. Amen.

COMMENTARY

Largely a replica of No. 34. It is made out for the wife of the client of No. 33, who is himself given a little space at the end.

1. נטרתא (ל): noun of intensive formation; cf. the charm eis phroterghen, Reitzenstein, Poim. 292.

2. מאירוכה: for the first element Mâi see Justi, p. 187. The name also appears in the unpublished No. 16093.

3. כומבוי: cf. Κωφαιος, Κυβαι, Κομβοφεις, Justi, p. 165.

4. סוטטא: (a plural-point is not visible) a peculiar formation, evidently to be connected with the theme סוט, סטא, "go astray"—hence "seducing spirits," corresponding to the words before and after. The form may be explained as a Pi'el participle, with rejection of prefix. Cf. 2 Ki, 22: 19 ff., and the πνεύμασιν πλάνοις καὶ διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων of 1 Tim. 4: 1.

דיאבולא: some of the characters are uncertain, but the word is sufficiently clear. It appears in Syriac only (in the singular in -ôs) in the Arabic lexicons; see Payne-Smith, col. 868.

קרתא: evidently the same as the common קרתא. Notice the distinction made here between diabolic arts and human machinations.

5. For the assonance, see p. 61. Letters and angels are practically the same; see p. 99. Of these angels, Nuriel is one of the archangels (also Uriel), Man'ariel and Hithmiel are unique, Saltiel is listed by Schwab as a form of Saltiel. These were Moses' guardian angels, and so can be effective for the present client.

COMMENTARY

This inscription has a twofold interest. Its magic purpose is the insurance of a bride against the goblin which would destroy her powers of motherhood; the evil spirit is invited to go to the bridal chamber and there partake of a certain food and drink, which it is to be presumed, would in some way incapacitate his powers; the text is badly obscured, but enough survives to recall the book of Tobit and the charm Raphael performed against the demon which haunted the chamber of Tobias's bride. Magic is full of this lilit witch who destroys love; for an early instance, cf. the Maḥlu-series, iii, 1 ff.: "The witch . . . who robs the love of the enamored man, . . . of the enamored maid. Looking at her he feels her lascivious charm. She looks on the man and takes away his love; she looks on the maid and takes away her love." Cf. Nos. 13, 28.

The other feature of interest is that the charm is given as though from the old pagan deities, the lord Šameš, Sin, Bel, Nannai, and Nirig, the ancient Nergal. All these except Nannai survived as evil spirits,—the spirits of the seven planets—in the Mandaic religion (see Norberg, Onom., s. vv.), but the present charm confesses their benevolent power and is also without any Mandaic trace. (This more antique aspect of these deities appears in the early Mandaic amulet published by Lidzbarski, in the de Vogüé volume, where, l. 247 ff., "Samiš, Bel, Nirig and Kewan have strengthened him.") It is a relic of the religion which survived to a comparatively late date in Harran. The charm is given in the form of an oracle from these deities according to ancient magical use; see p. 100. For these Syrian deities see the list given by Jacob of Sarug, edited by Martin, ZDMG, xxix, 110-131, and in general for the material Chwolson, d. Ssabier u. d. Ssabismus (1856). For the use made by the Harranian pagans of "magic, conjurations, knots, figures, amulets," etc., see Chwolson's extract from the Fihrist, ibid., ii, 21; for their use of oracles, p. 19.

1. אַחַחְפִּיר: ח for ה, see § 6.

2. For the demon's artificial names, see p. 77.

2 f. מִרְיָא שָׁמִישׁ: in the Mandaic אַדוּנִי is the epithet of the Sun, e. g. Ginza r., p. 23, l. 15, ed. Peterman; for שָׁמִישׁ, cf. Mandaic שְׁמִישׁ.

כִּינָא: נ is more likely than ר, and we obtain a form of Sin in the Syriac. The Mandaic has both סִין and סִירָא.

בִּי: a dialectic form of בִּיל (Mandaic). For analogies in neo-Punic names (בִּי, בִּעִ, בִּע), see Lidzbarski, Handbuch, 289; CIS, Inscr. phoen., no. 869; and in Syriac the deity Bêducht (Bel's or Beltis's, daughter), see discussion in G. Hoffmann, Ausszüge aus syrischen Akten persischer Märtyrer (Leipzig, 1880), 151 ff.

נַנְנָא: the ancient Babylonian goddess Nanna (see Jastrow, Religion Babyloniens u. Assyriens i, 76 ff., 252, 266), daughter of Sin. See at length for the later character of this deity G. Hoffmann, Ausszüge, 130 ff., 151 ff. (for later literature, Roscher's Lexicon, s. v. "Nana"). She combined both Venus- and Diana-like characteristics, and thus appears on coins with a crescent on her head (ibid., 152). This lunar characteristic doubtless explains the gender of the deity in our text, where as the verb shows, he is masculine. In his history the moon god has vacillated between the two genders, and while in later religion the moon's character has generally been defined as female, nevertheless in the Harranian religion the moon was androgynous; see the excursus by Chwolson in his Ssabier, i, 399 ff. (Hence the Latin writers express this Mesopotamian deity by Lunus.) It may be noticed that in the reference to Antiochos Epiphanes' raid upon the temple of Ναναίς in 2 Mac. i: 13, 15, there is found in the Alexandrine Codex the masculine variant Ναναίου.

4. דודיב: the name is obscure, probably equivalent to מרדובינא, 37: 10, q. v.

חנוקיה: the normal feminine of this formation, as against קטולתא. The same evil spirit, אמא חנוקתא, "Strangling Mother" (of babes) appears twice in Gollancz's Syriac charms, pp. 81, 83 (in Actes of the 11th Congr. of Orientalists, sect. 4). And the like epithet is found in the Greek amulet published by Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 298, for Baskania, the Lilith-witch, who is charged with the same murderous functions: ὁρκίζω σε, Στραγγαλία πολέμορφε, ἢ ἐπερχομένη ἐπὶ τὰ μικρὰ παῖδια, ἥτις ἔχεις χεῖρα σιδεράν καὶ σέρεις τὰ παῖδια καὶ ἀλέπτεις αὐτὰ καὶ τελευτῶσιν. And there follow immediately "the names of the holy angels," just as these are referred to in l. 5. See notes on No. 42. With Στραγγαλία cf. the demoniac maladies πνευμαλισμὸς and παιδοπονηστρία cited by Roscher, Ephialtes, 55, 59.

וּמְתַקְרִיא וּי: Mandaic form of the fem. pl. The best interpretation of the line is that the mischief wrought to the embryo was charged to the parents who so gained the ill-fame of infanticides. Cf. Ginza ii, 98 (ed. Norberg):

"hence have arisen the abortive ones who make abortions and destroy the foetus." The epithets are in the singular, being used distributively.

5. מלאכא הלין: i. e. the deities mentioned above; see above pp. 97, 99.

6. נחין: "come to the birth." Cf. Rabbinic חייטא, "midwife," and the Syriac Afel used of the function of midwives, e. g. Peshitto to Ex. 1: 16.

7. גליפא? נמיפא Cf. 11: 8.

אוייל לבית חלולא: the א' ב' ח' is the common Syriac term for the marriage chamber, or the nuptials in general. The imperative is apparently addressed like the preceding imperative to the demon who is bidden to go, if she dare, to the wedding, and there partake of the magic foods prepared against her.

נקותא: the Syriac nkāyā, "libation."

אישתא: the spelling represents the Syriac fem. impr.

יורוך וי' . . . : probably a Persian feminine name in -duh, the bride's name to be filled out here. The following word is obscure, the missing radical may be ב.

COMMENTARY

A badly mutilated bowl with much of the inscription illegible. It is of pagan origin; in the name of God the Mystery of heaven, water and earth, it concludes with a par vobiscum from the gods. The expression "victorious peace," l. 11, recalls the standing Mandaic doxology, "Life is victorious," and the threefold division of the universe may be from the same source. The charm is against a murderous house spirit and is in part parallel to No. 36; here the demon is masculine and is represented as carousing upon the blood of his victims. The quarterings of the circle or seal in the center contain letters of the Tetragrammaton—apparently יה.

1. דרמנא: a Persian word noted by the native Syriac lexicographers, and neo-Syriac; also in Pognon B. See Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., 127.

3. זרוי: cf. Zaroes, name of a Magian, and Zaroi, in Firdausi; the present spelling substantiates Zar- against other readings; see Justi, p. 383.

4. אלהא: name of the Light-King in the later Mandaic religion; see Brandt, Mand. Rel., 47. For his following epithet as the Mystery of heaven and earth, cf. "the Great Mystery," who is the helper of Hibil-Ziwa in his descent to hell, Ginsar, p. 140, ed. Petermann; see Brandt, Mand. Schr., 143. For the מיה קבין cf. Gen. 1: 10. Other "gods" are named below.

7. פיתנאמא וי: resumes אימר, l. 5.

8. ראוי מלאכא: either in appositional sense, ראוא used like אימר, see p. 86, or ר' refers to the magical rites conjuring the angels who are called upon against the evil spirit.

עילא: the Rabbinic-Mandaic preposition of plur. form, 'elāwē, but with suffix attached as to a singular form; cf. בנח, "his sons."

9. שמייע: for שמייע: the incantation heard? The following pples. represent the carousing of the demon over the flesh and blood of his victims. These realistic descriptions were in themselves regarded as prophylactic. מבייל appears to be denominative verb from a noun in מי, formed to rhyme with אכיל.

10. מרובינא = דורייב, a perversion, in 36: 4. The word corresponds to the actual Syriac מריבנא tabescere faciens, Payne-Smith, col. 831.

גינא: probably גינא, jinn, see p. 80.

אבוכון: Mandaic "your father."

COMMENTARY

For the language and script of this and the following Mandaic bowls, see § 7.

A charm executed in behalf of a certain woman and her husband. The sons with their families are included by name. The charm is particularly addressed against a specified liliith, with whom "the mighty Istar" who is named later, may be identical.

1. "House, dwelling," etc.: these four terms occur in Lidzb. 4 and 5. The ܠܝܬܬܐ (which is found in the Mandaic literature in the original meaning) is here reduced from the sense of "temple, palace," as in Babylonian, to that of a private mansion. The word also appears in Hyvernât, l. 15. In 40: 4, ܒܝܬܐܢܐ is the cattle-barn; in general perhaps "outbuilding."

2. בנה for the plur. w. suffix, see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 144.

3. חויתא: "cattle"; it occurs in the sense of "wild beast," in 39: 6; singular חיותא.

אנאת: the singular would be the equivalent of the Assyrian ānu, "vessel," = Heb. אֵי and Arabic inān. The word is otherwise unknown in Aramaic, having been replaced by the derivative mān. In the Talmud vessels are favorite abodes of the demons. One is tempted to regard the word as a plural of ענא, "sheep," but for the following "of the house."

חינדא: i. e. "Indian woman"; cf. חנינו, חנינו, 24: 1; 40: 16.

4. דודי=דודא, Nos. 15, 21.—מראד = mār, "lord" + Adda; a form of Hadad; or the first element may be the deity Mar, Bir, etc. (see Clay, Amurru, 95), so that the name is equivalent to the ancient Damascene name ברהד (as in Pognon's Zakar inscription), the Biblical Benhadad. With inexact construction, M. is the husband. For . . . = "both, and," cf. 1. 14.

6. ננחאי: so the probable reading. Notice from the erasure that "lilith" and "angel" are interchangeable titles for this being. Cf. the Lilit בנחאי, 40: 17.

8. בעודאי: a corruption of עבודיאל?—For עבדיא and פריביא see p. 72 f. The second word is supplied from 40: 4.

9. מאראבא: l. 14 מאראבא, in l. 12 with the second א caretted; an old theophorous name = מר + אב (or מר + רבא?)

אודיא: Persian Zādōē, see Justi, p. 378, quoting a name of the fifth century.

רואוניא: Persian name of a Syrian monk of the seventh century, ibid. 82.

סרימא: original root סרם (see Nöldeke, § 45); the verb is found in the bowls of Pognon and Lidzbarski, and defines the word as used in the Mandaic literature, thus relieving Nöldeke's doubt. Cf. a like series of passive ppls. at end of Lidzb. 4.

מסאמא: the reading is almost certain, but I cannot identify the root; probably an error for מסארמא, as in 40: 21.

רגילא: a denominative from רגל, = Rabbinic רגול. cf. the Arabic ragala, "strike, tie (a sheep) on the foot." The word occurs in Lidzb. 4.

11. שביקלה: the passage is identical with 40: 22, except for the latter's reading, שביקילה, "which I have dismissed from him"; the present text is to be so interpreted. For the form see Nöldeke, § 170.

מחרבאלחן = 40: 23. For the fem. pl. in א, see ibid., 162.

12. סיפא = סחפא, cf. ibid. 63; the Pael in 7: 17.

מאתנא: I can suggest only the root עטן, found in the Rabbinic עטין, "olive-press"; but according to Nöldeke, § 45, ע is persistent in Mandaic.

13. זאזיא: the Assyrian zāzu, "abundance", Muss-Arnolt, Ass. Heb. i, 277, and identical with the Targumic זאזא, "foliage," Targum Job 14: 9. An archangel Zaziel appears in a papyrus published by Wessely, xlii, 65, l. 42.

חתמאתא: for חתמאתא.

14. דאזריא: with change of construction from the preposition על; cf. Nöldeke, § 222.—For omission of relative after בנה see p. 39.

15. (Exterior) קר is sure, perhaps קרש.

Health and arming and sealing and protection (2) be for . . . and the body and soul (3) and the unborn child and womb of Bardesâ whose mother is the daughter of Dâdê. (4) Charmed are the Sorcery-spirits in stocks of iron; charmed the Lilith (5) in chains of lead; charmed the empoisoning male Devils and charmed the empoisoning female Liliths;
(6) charmed [the arts of?] evil men and hostile Beasts, (7) and evil Mysteries and the (magic) Circle of malignant Masters and Sages and Doctors, and the melting of Wax figures (8) of him who is alive: from the unborn child and womb of Bardesâ whose mother is Termê b. D.

Charmed the Lilith that appears to her (9) in . . . ; charmed the Lilith that appears to her in [shape?] of Tâtâ her sister's daughter; charmed all the defiling Ghosts (10) that have entered, which appear to her in Dreams of night and in Visions of day; charmed and sealed with the seal of (11)
King Solomon.

Again: Health and arming and sealing be for the womb and the parturition of Bardesâ (12) whose mother is Termê b. D.

COMMENTARY

A charm for a pregnant woman. I may compare the mortuary incantation published by me in JAOS, 1911, 272, no. 1, which includes prayers for the unborn child, עֵלָה, of the petitioner. From l. 4 the present charm is very similar to that in Pognon A.

2. דִּאֲרִיא: so in Pognon B, in Lidzb. 5, דִּאֲרֵע; a feminine form in -ê, cf. תִּירִטִיא, l. 8 (the mother's name, overlooked here). Cf. דִּאֲרֵה, 12: 2.

4. סִחְרִיא: also Pognon A. In the Mandaic appear the סִחְרֵה, "sorcerers," Norberg, Onom., 110. For the meaning cf. Ass. sâhiru; in this sense the root is not otherwise found in Rabbinic and Syriac.

פ: סִחְרִיא: Pognon's text, סִחְרִיא (to be cited to Nöldeke, § 89, 1a),

5. אֲבָרָא: the Syriac אֲבָרָא was used for "lead" and "tin," according to the Syriac lexicographers, who postulate a distinction between abârâ and abrâ, or abârâ and ebârâ but dispute which word is applied to which metal (Payne-Smith, col. 19). Both lead and tin were used in magic, the former especially in the καταδυσμοί, like the love-charm from Hadrumetum, the Cypriote defixiones (SPBA, xiii, 160, etc.), and cf. Index to Wessely, xlii, μολύβδον, et seq.; tin was equally used, like all the metals, ibid., καταδυσμοί, and a case in the Testament of Solomon where tin is atropaic, JQR, ix, 584. Hence we cannot positively decide whether our abâr is lead or tin; but the weight of the former metal may better suit the symbolism of the language. —As to the meaning of the Assyrian abar Assyriologists are at variance. Lenormant, in TSBA, vi, 337 f., 346, argues correctly from the alloy mentioned in iv R no. 2, rev. 17, that abar = lead and anaku = tin. However Sayce, Archaeology of the Cuneiform Inscriptions, p. 60, denies that the Sumerian or Assyrian word for tin is known. Lyon, in his Keilschrifttexte Sargons, 53, 82, makes anaku = lead (cft. Heb. אֵיךְ) and leaves abar untranslated. Hilprecht and Haupt, on basis of chemical analysis, find that abar is used of magnesite, Hilprecht, Assyriaca, 80 ff., 83. עֲפֵרָה, the Hebrew equivalent of the Aramaic אֲבָרָא, is "lead." The Syriac 'ân'ka is "tin," whereas its Hebrew equivalent אֵיךְ, "plummet" rather suggests the heavier metal lead. The Hebrew for "tin" is בְּרִיל, which however in Zech. 4: 10 may rather be "lead." This confusion between lead and tin in the same word is paralleled by the ambiguous use of plumbum in Latin;

p. nigrum is lead, and p. candidum tin; see Pliny H. N., xxxiv, 47 (ed. Weise, 1841); so also in Arabic. The different vocalizations 'abrâ and, עברת vs. 'abârâ, and Heb. 'anâk vs. Syr. 'ân^{ka}, appear to be attempts at differentiation. עברת, apparently "lead," appears in W. T. Ellis's bowl-text, which I have edited in JAOS, 1912, 434.

5. חוראשיא: amendment after Pognon's parallel, but with the form found in l. 6.

ליליא: an inadvertent repetition.

6. חוראשאמה for the adjectival formation, see Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 105.

חיואניא: possibly absolute pl. (-â from -ân); or a masc. plural form, cf. חומריא, 38: 11.

7. חואר (n. b. construct) for חראר, as in זכריא, see Nöldeke, ibid., § 46. I interpret the word of the magic circle, part of the dreaded arts of the necromancer; see p. 88.

רבאניא: sorcerers are by tradition "Doctors."

משריא דקריא: משריא may be inf. Peal of שרא, or better, in agreement with the context, Pael ppl. plur; i. e. "dissolution," or "dissolvers." ק' is "wax" in Rabbinic, "pitch" in Syriac and Mandaic, at least according to the references in Payne-Smith and Norberg. "Pitch" might be the translation here, but comparing the plural with the Greek κνυρ and the Latin cerai, I have related the word to the well-known use of wax in Hellenistic magic. Any plastic substance might be used for these simulacra of the enemy in Babylonian sorcery. Tallquist enumerates clay, pitch, honey, tallow, dough (Maḫlu, 19, and see his note to ZAL. LU, p. 119); so also Fossey, Magie ass., 80. Wax does not seem to be identified among those substances, though Jastrow and Thompson speak of wax as used. Assyrian kîru or kîru (see Muss-Arnolt, p. 432) = pitch. Is the Latin-Greek word from the same origin, the term having undergone extensive modification in meaning? Its etymology is uncertain, see A. Walde, Lateinisches etymologisches Wörterbuch, 1910, s. v. cera. For the use of wax in western magic, see the ample notes and bibliography in Abt, Die Apologie d. Apuleius, 82.

חורא: cf. the isolated instance given by Nöldeke, p. 344.

8. חירמיא: the first letter is conjectured from a mere remnant; possibly Θερμια?

9. In this line a definite family ghost appears. רמותא is used in like sense in earlier bowls, e. g. 7: 14. The word before תאתא is unintelligible.

תאתא: cf. the feminine name Tatā in Strassmeier, Inscripten von Darius, no. 25, 12; also Tatta-dannu, Strassmeier, Inscripten von Nabonidus, no. 343, 8, and Tātū, etc. in Johns, Assyrian Deeds, 450, Clay, BE, x, Glossary; טאטי 25: 1.

10. סאניאתא: I connect this, as a participle, with the root סין, Arabic šāna, which does not appear as a verb in Syriac; from it comes the Syriac šyānā, "dirt," and with the same is to be connected the Hebrew סנן, "shoe." The same word, masc. and fem., occurs in Pognon A, p. 40, which he would derive from סנא "hate," but without explanation of the form. It might, if a singular instance, be an error for סאניאתא. However n. b. that in Sachau's Elephantine papyri occurs the metathesis סאן for סנא, Pap. 57: 2, 58: 16.

יאמיא: a mistake, corrected by the next word. The same note is to be made upon למל in l. 11.

11. תום: doubtless = תוב, "again," so often found on our bowls. Thus Nöldeke's explanation of תום in the Mandaic literature (Mand. Gram., 204) is confirmed.—מוראלה for the form, see ibid., § 67.

COMMENTARY

A long and repetitious charm for a certain man and his family and property, including the several kinds of live-stock. About half of the inscription is found on the exterior.

1. With the same invocation begin the sections of the Ginza, also some of Pognon's bowls.

וּמִכּוּרָא: for ו of purpose, see the like phrase in Pognon, e. g. no. 14, and Nöldeke, Mand. Gram., § 293.

4. בִּינְיָאנָא: as the regimen shows, the barn.

חֲמֻרָא: i. e. hemrâ, also cited by Syriac lexicographers, see Payne-Smith, ad loc., and used as a collective plural, Nöldeke, Syr. Gram., 91. The following word was written תּוּחָא, ר was then caretted above, and finally the word rewritten.

5. בִּסְאֲרוּ: evidently an old Persian name in Koseform; cf. Aḫseri, Xšayarša, Artaxsathra, Justi, pp. 12, 173, 34. The בִּס in דִּבְכִּי, here and again below, represents the vowel of the prefix, before the vowelless first radical.

מִחְאֲנֹשׁ = Meh = Mithra, plus Anōš, a Persian genius, Justi, pp. 208, 17.

חֲיִיא: the long period which this phrase concludes is paralleled below.

בְּאַלְיִיכֹן: this ancient and full form of the preposition appears in Pognon B, but not in Nöldeke, under § 159.

6. בְּרִאֲלֵיכֹן אֵלָא חֲיִיא: cf. l. 18, בְּרִאֲלֵיכֹן אֵלָא חֲיִיא = the preposition just noted, and is used uniquely with a verb of swearing, where in the Semitic ב is found. Cf. the Greek ἐπι, representing, as in the English "swear on the Bible," the primitive action of laying the hand on the sacred object.

16. מִרְאֲחִי?—17. בְּחִנְאִי: cf. נְנֹחְנִיא, 38: 6.

18. This antagonism of Buznāi's granddaughter to herself is evidently a case of casting out devils by Beelzebub. The sorcerer affects that he has received from one of her brood the proper charms by which to bind her. Observe interchange of מִלְאֲכָא with לִילִיתָא.

בראִלְאִין וְכִי : "by that which is upon," i. e. "by the adjuration of" Life. For the redoubled preposition, see Nöldeke, § 231 b. For the phrase, see to l. 6.

פִּקְרְתֵּאִין : for the sing. with אִין —, see ibid., § 146.

23. סְמֵאנָא : but a feminine is demanded.

מְחֻתָּא : in agreement with the Syriac; cf. מְחֻתָּא, 16: 6; in the Ginza, מְחֻתָּא.

26. חֵיָּא זְאִבְיָאִן : the same doxological formula in Pognon, B, no. 22, and Lidzb. 5.

APPENDIX

No. 41 (CBS 179)

This text is unique,¹ being inscribed on the top of a human skull. Enough is legible to indicate that it is a magical inscription, doubtless of the same order as those on the bowls. The skull is remarkably well preserved, and though badly shattered, almost all the pieces have been recovered. But the text is sadly worn and obscured through the shaling of the surface, and only a few detached words are legible. There are two inscriptions, one running across the length of the left-hand side of the top, from front to back and also filling up some space in the forward part of the right-hand side. The other, shorter, inscription is at the back of the right-hand side, at right angles to the central suture.

In the first line of the longer text are visible the words, רחמן, ללאת; in the second אנת רח, indicating an address to the evil spirit. The following names are visible: פרוך, cf. 5: 1; מרדכי בן שאל (?), also spelt מי, "Mordecai ben Saul"; and a woman's name (evidently the wife of the first-named man—נעלה can be read in one place), נמפי, so the almost certain reading. I take the name to be a feminine hypocoristic in -ai to be connected with Gathaspar, in the Excerpta barbara to Eusebius (ed. Schoene, i, app. 228), one of the three Wise Men, the later Gaspar (Caspar, Jaspas), connected by philologists with the Old-Persian Windafarna; Justi, p. 368.

The use of a skull for recording a magical inscription opens up an interesting line of magical practice. The skull has become part of the stock apparatus of the necromancer, and its use in that connection is typical of his power over the dead, while the presence of the gruesome object adds to the awe in which he is held. But all through magic runs the morbid theme of the use of mortuary remains. In the Greek love charms, the texts are buried in the graveyard; in the magic brews for compelling love, human bones are used, and in a late Arabic charm a broom from a cemetery has efficacy in bringing the beloved to the lover's side (see to No. 28). Cf. the burial of Pognon's bowls in a cemetery. Primitive animistic beliefs have survived, which connect the skeleton with the world of spirits; it is a material point d'appui, and the skull is especially preferred as the most striking and perhaps most durable part of the anatomy. It may be noticed that in Arabic the word for skull is also used of the soul (Wellh. Skizzen, 3, p. 161, 164).² There is a reference in the Talmud to the necromantic use of a skull; Sanh. 65b: "there are two kinds of necromancy (בעל אוב), the one where the dead is raised by naming him, the other where he is asked by means of a skull (הנישאל בגלגול)." Joel (Aberglaube, i, 44) thinks this refers to some artificial skull-shaped object; but our actual skull illustrates the practice noticed in the Talmud. The use of skulls (calvaria) in classical magic is also vouched for in the Apology of Apuleius; see Abt, p. 141. For this practice of "speaking skulls," we may note its special vogue among the Sabians; see Chwolson, Die Saabier, ii, 150, and Dozy and de Goeje, Actes of the Leyden (6th) Congress of Orientalists, ii, 365 f., cf. 293.

But the skull was also efficacious as a prophylactic object. James of Edessa notes that a dried human head was used by the heathen Syrians as an amulet (quoted by Robertson Smith, Religion of the Semites, 362, referring to Kayser's edition of the Canones, p. 142). Especially as part of the skeleton was it efficacious against the evil eye; see Seligmann, Der böse Blick, ii, 141, who notes the use in Italy of a tiny skull-charm against the Jettatura, and also the use among the ancient Taurians and the tribes of Caucasus of the heads of enemies stuck on poles as a prophylactic; also Elworthy, The Evil Eye, 340, notes the use of skeleton-like figures as talismans in Italy; he finds the same talisman in classic times, comparing King, Gnostics and their Remains, 213 (ed. 2, 180). The skull therefore falls into the general category of frightful or obscene objects, which had the power of repelling the evil eye in particular and evil spirits in general.

Towards the close of my work on this volume, Professor Richard Gottheil, who had several years ago thought of publishing the bowls, kindly forwarded me some notes and transcriptions which he had made in his preliminary essays. Among the papers was the copy of a text which is not now found in the Museum. It differed so radically from the other inscriptions that I inquired of Prof. Gottheil if it was taken from a bowl. He replied that he knew of no other source whence the text could have come into his set of papers. Accordingly on the hypothesis that the original text was once in the Museum, I venture to publish Prof. Gottheil's copy, and do so the more readily because of its interesting character and the illustration it affords to several points in the texts above. It contains a form of the Lilith legend, widespread in folklore, and a bowl would have been a perfectly proper place for a text of this prophylactic character. I have not however included the text in my Glossaries.

A rough figure of a hand (prophylactic against the evil eye) contains the Aramaic legend:

אנא מרעיי דיוסף קא (?) הא (=) אחינא ולא שלטא ביה שגא בישא:

"I am the seed-producer (?) of Joseph; when I come, an evil year cannot prevail over him,"—a play of thought between Joseph as controller of the fertility of Egypt and the fertility of the family, and as a good omen for the expectant mother.

A "David's Shield" contains in the center יאה רגהי, a fanciful form of Adonai, on the left hand שטן, "Satan," in another division אבני and nearby יתץ, i. e. אבניתץ, to be found in Schwab, Vocab. Another species of the shield more roughly designed contains יהוה in the center, flanked with יה, etc. and אדני, with מטטרין and סנדלפן on either side. The changes are rung on the possible mutations of ילק, and the scripture Dt. 28: 10 is cited. Similar charms against the Lilith are to be found at the end of Sefer Raziel and in Buxtorf's Lexicon, s. v.

Shaddai

Sanui Sansanui Semniglyph Adam YHWH Kadmon Life Lilith

In the name of Y" the God of Israel who besits the cherubs, whose name is living and enduring forever. Elija the prophet was walking in the road and he met the wicked Lilith and all her band. He said to her, Where art thou going, Foul one and Spirit of foulness, with all thy foul band walking along? And she answered and said to him: My lord Elija, I am going to the house of the woman in childbirth who is in pangs (?), of So-and-so daughter of Such-a-one, to give her the sleep of death and to take the child she is bearing, to suck his blood and to suck the marrow of his bones and to devour his flesh. And said Elija the prophet—blessed his name!—With a ban from the Name—bless it!—shalt thou be restrained and like a stone shalt thou be! And she answered and said to him: For the sake of Y" postpone the ban and I will flee, and will swear to thee in the name of Y" God of Israel that I will let go this business in the case of this woman in childbirth and the child to be born to her and every inmate so as do no injury. And every time that they repeat or I see my names written, it will not be in the power of me or of all my band to do evil or harm. And these are my names: Lilith, Abitar (Abito?), Abikar (Abiko?), Amorpho, Hakaš, Odam, Kephido, Ailo, Matrota, Abnukta, Šatriha, Kali, Batzeh, Taltui, Kišša. And Elija answered and said to her: Lo, I adjure thee and all thy band, in the name of Y" God of Israel, by gematria 613, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and in the name of his holy Shekina, and in the name of the ten holy Seraphs, the Wheels and the holy Beasts and the Ten Books of the Law, and by the might of the God of Hosts, blessed is he!—that thou come not, thou nor thy band to injure this woman or the child she is bearing, nor to drink his blood nor to suck the marrow of his bones nor to devour his flesh, nor to touch them neither in their 256 limbs nor in their 365 ligaments and veins, even as she is (= thou art?) not able to count the number of the stars of heaven nor to dry up the water of the sea. In the name of: 'Hasdiel Šamriel has rent Satan.'

COMMENTARY

Only a few detailed notes are necessary. Of the terms at the beginning, סנוי סנסנוי and סמנלך are common in childbirth charms (see Schwab. Vocab., s. נסנ). The second is erroneously explained by Schwab; it is שם נ', the inscribed Name, cf. the שם ... נלך in 11: 9. סנוי and its reduplication סנסנוי probably mean "divorced."

N. B. the order of Adam, YHWH, Kadmon.

מירקאדא דמ' (ירקאדא) is obscure to me. The root is probably used in the Syriac sense of mourning, hence supplicating; or cf. Heb. חיל, "writhe," as well as "dance."

אִידָא כַּת דִּנְהָ I would read as אִידָה כַּת דִּינָה, the first as the indefinite pronoun fem. quaequac, the last as representing the Greek deira, which is commonly used in the papyri, the actual name being inserted upon use.

חַתָּם = חֹטֶף, cf. Arabic حَتَم.

Of the names of the Lilith the second = Abatur the Mandaic genius (see Glossary A); but the possible reading of the copy, Abito, may be preferable, in view of the Greek parallels; see below; the third is the Greek ἀμύσητος.

613: the figure is the gematriac sum of 'the Lord God of Israel,' as also the number of positive and negative commandments of the Law. As Mr. A. Simon, Harrison Fellow of the University, has suggested to me, the preceding abbreviation stands for נִימְטָרָא.

The "256 limbs" are 248 in Jewish lore. For the 365 ligaments, cf. the identical expression in a charm given by Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 295.

The 10 Books of the Law are the double of the Pentateuch; cf. the Eighth Book of Moses in the Leyden MS. which Dieterich has published at the end of his Abraxas.

The very ancient use of epical narrative as an efficient magical charm was described above p. 62; thus the mere narrative of a demon's power, as in the case of Dibbarra, is potent, or, à fortiori, the relation of a triumph over the evil spirit from some sacred legend. In the present case we have the added virtue of the revelation of the demon's names, and she swears that whenever they confront her, she will retire; the knowledge of her names binds her (cf. p. 56).

Dr. M. Gaster has published in Folk-lore xi (whole number xli), 129, an interesting paper entitled "Two Thousand Years of a Charm Against the Child-Stealing Witch." The latter uncanny spirit has already met us in several of our preceding texts (Nos. 11, 18, 36, etc.). Dr. Gaster surveys a wide material of European and Semitic forms of this magical narrative, all of which have evidently the same root. He draws on Slavonic, Roumanian and modern Greek legends, and cites one of Gollancz's Syrian charms, a collection to which I have had frequent occasion to refer,¹ and also quotes in translation a Jewish charm of the same order from the Mystery of the Lord (in the Hebrew "סוד", a book I have not been able to obtain).

This Jewish legend is almost identical with ours. It is considerably shorter, concluding with the names of the Lilith and a direction to hang up the names in the room of the woman concerned. The names are almost identical with those in our text; they are: Satrina, Lilith, Abito, Amizo, Izorpo, Koko, Odam, Ita, Podo, Eilo, Patrota, Abiko, Kea, Kali, Batna, Talto, Partasah. My form Amorpho is probably older; Koko = amorpho may be preferable to my Kaš.

In both these Jewish forms Elija and the Lilith are the actors. In the Syriac legend quoted by Gaster from Gollancz, it is a saint Mar Ebedishu and the Evil Spirit in the likeness of an ugly woman who are the characters; the latter has for one of her names that of "the Strangling-mother of children" (cf. above to 36: 4). In the European Christian legends, the benevolent actor is the Virgin, Michael, or a certain saint bearing the name Siseo, or Sisynios. These names are derived from the Jewish סניי סנסני, as Gaster suggests. In the Greek legend the spirit is Gylo, the earlier Γελω, which appears also in the magical papyri.² In all children are the object of the fiend's ravages, in one case the charm is for a boy afflicted with cataract.

There are some other simpler forms of this legend contained in Greek manuscript amulets which were not accessible to Dr. Gaster. In his Poimandres, p. 298, Reitzenstein publishes a text which is the earlier prototype of the Roumanian folk-legend published by Gaster, p. 132. It reads: "When the archangel Michael came down from heaven, there met him the impure spirit with her hair down her back and her eyes inflamed. And the archangel Michael said to her: Whence comest and whither goest thou? The impure one answered and said to him: I go to enter the house as a serpent, dragon, reptile, I change into a quadruped, I go to make the plagues of women, to humble their heart, to dry up the milk, to raise the hair of the master of the house . . . and then I kill them. For my name is called Paxarea. For when the Holy Mary bore the Word of Truth

² Wessely, Vienna Denkschriften, xlii, 66, also Γελω, Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 298. For Gello = the Assyrian Gallu, see Frank, ZA, xxiv, 161.

I went to deceive her and . . . ?.³ And the archangel Michael seized her by the locks on the right hand and said to her: Tell me thy twelve names.⁴ And she said: I am called first Gelou, second Morphous, (third, etc.) Karanichos, Amixous, Anidazou, Marmalat, Karane, Selenous, Abiza, Ariane, Maran. Wherever are found my twelve names and thy name, archangel Michael, and thy name Sisinius and Sinodoros, I will not enter into the house of such a one." Compare also the amulet given on the preceding page in Reitzenstein (p. 297), lacking the reference to the Virgin, the demon enumerating her plagues.

A similar legend, in large part identical with both these just named, is given in the Greek-Italian charms published by Pradel.⁵ In this Michael descending from Sinai meets the hag Abuzou⁶ and the demons cast out of heaven. He inquires where she is going; she answers she crawls into houses like a serpent, dragon, etc., to bring all evils on men, to dry up the mother's milk, to wake the children and kill them. Then, evidently a Christian accretion, she causes faction in the church, sends floods, destroys ships. Michael asks her her name, which is Pataxaro. He asks for her many names. She swears by the throne of God and the eye (= eyes) of the Beasts (cf. the oath in our text) that she will tell the truth. She then gives forty names, the first two of which are Gilou, Morphou.

The legend sometimes ran out into the line of particular diseases, e. g. cataract, as in one of the Roumanian forms; or Beelzebub and other demons are named, as in an amulet in Vassiliev, Anecdota bysantina, i, 336. But the story of the wife-hating, child-murdering hag is the original element, as Gaster points out.

We thus possess forms of the legend in Hebrew and Syriac, in Greek texts of eastern and western Europe, and in modern Roumanian and Slavonic folklore, while the heroes of the epic include Elijah, Michael, Christ and various saints known or obscure. The persistency of the form appears also in the charm names. To compare the lists in the two Hebrew texts and in the two of Wendland and Pradel respectively and in Gollancz

⁴ The same number is found in the Hekate-Isis legend.

⁵ Griechische u. süd.-italienische Gebete, 23.

⁶ The Avezuba and Avestitza in Gaster's Roumanian legends.

(Syriac), we find that the initial Hebrew Lilith = Greek Gelou or Gilou = Syriac Geos, doubtless = Gelos. The second in the Hebrew, Abito (Abitar?) = Apiton the ninth in the Syriac; the third, Abiko (Abikar?) = Abiza or Abuzou in the Greek texts, and as we observed above Avezuba in the Roumanian. The fourth Amorpho (in our text) = Morphous or Morphou having third place in the Greek texts, and Martios, 4th in the Syriac. Amorpho is doubtless the Greek ἀμορφος, "shapeless," and our Jewish text alone has preserved the correct form. Eilo and its obscure predecessor in the Hebrew may be found in Pradel's Morpheiaton, and the latter's Phlegumon may translate the Hebrew שֵׁפ.

It is impossible to place our phylactery genealogically in such a mass of interrelated material. The Jewish text doubtless depends upon Greek tradition with its magical name Amorpho and its transliteration of deiva, while the later Greek forms have borrowed from the Hebrew in St. Sisynios. But the source of the legend is the common property of mankind, with roots as ancient as the Babylonian Labartu and Gallu. A child-killing demon which sucks babes' blood, etc., is found in Africa; see Budge, Osiris and the Egyptian Resurrection, i, 285, a reference pointed out to me by Professor Jastrow. In the Hellenistic magic a classical form of such legend was established out of all the elements that were brought together in that age, and this spread again assuming its variant forms among the peoples and faiths. If our text actually came from Nippur, it is of interest as the earliest form of the Jewish legend and as one which can be dated with approximate accuracy.

CORRECTIONS AND ADDITIONS

P. 20, line 4: read "Berlin" for "British."

P. 20: add to the list of published Mandaic bowls the two photographic plates of bowls (plates 1, 2) in J. de Morgan, Etudes linguistiques, vol. v, part 2, of his Mission scientifique en Perse.

P. 105, line 20: the Koran gives to the Mandaeans the same privileges as the Jews and the Christians (see 2: 59; 5: 73; 22: 17).

GENERAL GLOSSARY

Prefatory Note

Glossary C is arranged according to roots, the other two consonantally. The former indexes only the common nouns.

The citations of other authorities can be understood from § 2. The two publications of Pognon's are cited as "A" and "B", and Pognon's full glossaries will serve to locate all words of his texts. Where lines of texts are given, the reference is to the spiral line if facsimile is given, otherwise to the lines of the printed text. I have not thought it necessary to give the line citation for proper names even in my own texts, as they can be easily identified.

Under Glossary B, the following abbreviations are used: d. = daughter of, f. = father, h. = husband, m. = mother, s. = son, w. = wife.

Where a word appears in my text the first citation may be referred to for any treatment by the editor; references are also added to further discussions in the Introduction. Notes are occasionally added to words found in texts of other editors.

In Glossaries A and B all the occurrences are given with the exception of a few common divine names like יהוה; in Glossary C only typical citations and peculiar forms; also it has been the aim to give citations from the three dialects.

Prefatory Note

The concave spherical surface on which the bowl texts are inscribed precluded their reproduction by photography. At the best only a half of the text can be obtained satisfactorily by the camera, as the pair of photographs at the end of the Plates will show. Accordingly the texts had to be copied by hand.

Soon after the bowls came to the Museum, Professor Jastrow, of the University, and Professor Gottheil, of Columbia, undertook their publication. They secured the services of Mr. Horace Frank, Architect, for autographing the plates, a considerable sum of money being raised to meet this expense. Subsequently Drs. Jastrow and Gottheil gave up their plan of publication, and when Professor Hilprecht, then Curator, put the bowls into my hands, I fell heir to Mr. Frank's labors. I found he had prepared about 75 plates, but of these I have been able to use only 23, covering my Numbers 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 16, 17, 24, 28, 31, 36, 37, 38, 40. His other plates were copies of broken and mutilated bowls which were not worth publishing (see Introduction, § 1). It appears also that not all the good texts were placed in his hands, or else that he did not complete them all.

There is only one drawback in Mr. Frank's excellent reproductions, one which however does not impair their accuracy. Working without much direction and knowing nothing of the language, he often broke a word at the end of the line and carried it over to the next. I have seen no reason to repair this technical error in his copies, but have guarded against it in the work of the later copyists.

There thus remained of the texts which came to be included in this publication twenty-five which still required autographing. Shrinking from this tedious mechanical labor, especially after an expert hand had preceded me, I was very glad to avail myself of the kind cooperation of Professor

Gordon, Director of the Museum, who offered me the expert services of his staff. Consequently, under my direction, the remaining copies were prepared by Mr. William C. Orchard (Nos. 1, 5, 7, 10-15, 19, 21-23, 25, 27, 29, 32, 34, 35), and by Miss M. Louise Baker (Nos. 20, 26, 30, 33, 39).

The style of Mr. Frank's copies conditioned those for which I am responsible. He had abandoned the spiral arrangement of the originals and made his reproductions in straight lines. This method may be faulted as not giving the exact form of the original, but this demerit is small as compared with the advantage to the scholar of having the whole text lying before him at one glance without his being under the necessity of turning a bulky volume around and around to follow the spiral career of the text. I was therefore quite satisfied to retain this method of reproduction.

It may be remarked that all my decipherment was made entirely from the originals; only after my own work was finished did I compare Mr. Frank's copies. In a few cases I was able to improve his facsimiles, in several cases his copies, which were made when the texts were fresher and more legible (they have manifestly faded under exposure to light), have helped me correct or enlarge my readings. The other copyists also worked independently, and then we compared our respective results. The cooperation of others, expert copyists, with the author has thus tended to a full control of the accuracy of the facsimiles and transliterations.

I have finally to speak in the highest terms of the artistic and painstaking labors of these two gentlemen and Miss Baker, whose assistance has afforded me so great relief.

CATALOGUE

TEXT	PLATE	CATALOGUE NUMBER	SIZE in centimetres, height by diameter	DESCRIPTION
1 .	I.	8693	6.5 + 17	Broken and mended, with two holes. Written inside and out in large coarse script, .5 cm. average height, rude spiral design in center.
2	2	2945	7.2 + 17.4	Broken and mended. Fair, large characters. .4 cm. in height. In center two large figures, one in reverse position to other; one of which appears to be making a sign with his hand (as against the evil eye?), probably the sorcerer, the other with feet hobbled, the demon.
3	3-4	2963	10.3 + 20.5	Broken and mended, with a segment 6 + 12 cm. missing. Flat boss. The rim of the bowl has a double edge. Fair characters, .3 cm. high. In the center figure of a demon, armed with helmet and a sabre and spear in either hand, and his feet manacled.
4	4-5	2923	7.5 + 17.3	Broken and mended, small segment missing. Characters .4 cm. high. In the center figure of the sorcerer waving a magic bough.

TEXT	PLATE	CATALOGUE NUMBER	SIZE in centimetres, height by diameter	DESCRIPTION
5	6	2952	7 + 18	Slightly broken and mended, with small fragment missing. Characters .4 cm. high. In center rude figure of a demon with four arms and one leg.
6	7	2916	6 + 15.8	Perfect bowl but for a fracture which does not touch the text. Small circle in center. Characters .3 cm. high, rather crabbed.
7	8	16007	5.6 + 15.7	Broken and mended, with a square fragment of text missing. Fine, clear characters, .2 cm. high. In center circle with cross.
8	8-9	9013	8.5 + 16.6	Broken and mended, with two small fragments missing. Characters .2 cm. high. In center obscene picture of a lilith with hands and feet bound.
9	10	9010	6 + 17.7	Perfect bowl. Characters much obliterated, .4 cm. high. Circle in center. On exterior four short lines in Hebrew.
10	11	16014	6.9 + 14.2	Broken and mended with segment missing. Characters .4 cm. high. In center monstrous figure with owl-like head and apparently several breasts, presumably a lilith.
11	12	16022	6.3 + 16.1	Broken and mended, with three fragments of the text missing. Characters carelessly written, .3 cr .4 cm. high. In center rude design, probably of a lilith.

TEXT	PLATE	CATALOGUE NUMBER	SIZE in centimetres, height by diameter	DESCRIPTION
12	13	9009	7.2 + 17.7	Perfect bowl. Characters .4 cm. high, coarse but distinctly formed. In center a demon, with beastlike face and arms and feet bound. Endorsement on exterior.
13	14	8694	7 + 16.2	Broken and mended, with small piece missing. Coarse, clumsy characters, .6 cm. high. In the center a clumsy figure of a demon with caterpillar-like arms. Text continued on the exterior for 6 lines.
14	15	16017	6.8 + 18.7	Broken and mended, with missing segment. Characters .4 cm. high, in a good hand. In center a lillith with hands and feet manacled.
15	16	16087	7.3 + 17.2	Broken and mended. Characters .4 cm. high. In center figure of a serpent with its tail in its mouth.
16	17	2920	6.8 + 16.3	Broken and mended. Characters coarse, .3 cm. high. Rough circle in center.
17	18	2922	7 + 15.7	Broken and mended, with a segment missing. Characters coarse, .4 cm. high. In the center the circle and cross, formed in a peculiar way.
18	19	8695	7.2 + 16.1	Broken and mended, with fragment of about 5 cm. square missing. Coarse characters, .4 cm. high. In center rude and faded design—of a demon?

TEXT	PLATE	CATALOGUE NUMBER	SIZE in centimetres, height by diameter	DESCRIPTION
19	20		6.6 + 17.6	Broken and mended. Characters crabbed and obscure, closely written, .3 cm. high. Circle and cross in center.
20	21	16023	7 + 17	Broken and mended, fragment missing. Large, coarse characters, .6 cm. high. Large figure of a demon manacled, with a circle in his breast bisected by two lines. For the magical words accompanying see commentary.
21	22	16054	6.5 + 17	Broken and mended, with two fragments missing, a small one in the text. Script large, .8 cm. high, and rude. In center a rectangular figure divided into three squares, in one of those at the end two large markings like letters.
22	22-23	16006	6.5 + 16	Broken and mended, with two fragments missing. From the same hand as No. 21 and with the same design, the markings in the square suggesting a face.
23	22	16090	7 + 17.2	Broken and mended. From the same hand as Nos. 21, 22, and with similar design.
24	23	2926	7 + 16.8	Broken and mended, small fragment missing. Coarse script, .7 cm. high. In the center a figure of rude concentric circles with radial lines.

TEXT	PLATE	CATALOGUE NUMBER	SIZE in centimetres, height by diameter	DESCRIPTION

26	24	3997	6.9 + 15.5	Broken and mended. Script .4 cm. high. In the center a rough circle bisected by two lines, in each segment a magical word.
27	25	16041	5.6 + 16.6	Broken and mended with two considerable fragments missing. Script fine and fair, .2 cm. high. In the center a circle with cross.
28	25	2972	6.5 + 16.5	Broken and mended, four fragments missing, the text much blurred or obliterated. A fair script, .3 cm. high.
29	26	16055	6.8 + 17	Broken and mended, one fragment missing. Bold and well formed characters .5 cm. high.
30	26	16096	6.5 + 16.8	Broken and mended, small fragment missing. Script .3 to .4 cm. high. In center rude figure of a lilit with tresses flying and hands and feet bound.
31	27	9008	6.6 + 16	Perfect. Syriac script, .3 cm. high. In center a circle divided into four squares each with a cross in it.
32	28	16086	6.9 + 17	Broken and mended, one large and one small fragment missing. Same script and design as in No. 31.

TEXT	PLATE	CATALOGUE NUMBER	SIZE in centimetres, height by diameter	DESCRIPTION
33	29	16019	6.2 + 15.5	Broken and mended, with two considerable fragments missing. In center cross with circle.
34	30	9012	7.5 + 17.5	Broken and mended. Design as in Nos. 31, 32.
35	31	16097	6.5 + 16.1	Broken and mended, two small fragments missing. Design as in No. 33.
36	32	2933	6.3 + 15.4	Broken and mended, with about half of the two lines on the margin missing.
37	33	2943	6.5 + 17	Broken and frequently repaired, much of the margin missing and a large part of the text obliterated. The script the smallest in the Syriac bowls, .2 to .3 cm. high. In the center circle and cross, each segment containing presumably letters of the Tetragrammaton.
38	34	2941	7 + 17	Broken and mended, with several small holes. Mandaic script average character about .2 cm. high. Small circle in center. A brief phrase written radially near the margin on the exterior.
39	35	9005	6.8 + 17.2	Broken and mended, some fragments missing. Script larger and coarser than in No. 38, .3 cm. high.
40	36-38	2972	7.3 + 17.2	Broken and mended, some large lacunae. Script as in No. 39. The text covers also most of the exterior. Circles in the center.
